Segregation In Schools Here Upheld 2-1 by Court

Majority Finds Equal Opportunity For Both Races; Edgerton Dissents

By Elsie Carper
Post Reporter

The District's segregated school system was upheld yesterday by the United States Court of Appeals in a 2-to-1 decision.

The majority of the court found no evidence of discrimination against Negroes in the assigning of school buildings and said that the city offers equal educational opportunity for the two races.

The opinion, written by Judge E. Barrett Prettyman, supported the right of Congress under the Constitution to legislate a separate school system for Negroes. Judge Bennett Champ Clark concurred.

The dissent by Judge Henry W. Edgerton said segregation in schools was unconstitutional and noted inequalities offered Negroes in buildings and courses.

"It is plain," Judge Edgerton said, that Negro students "are denied better schooling and given worse because of their color. This the Constitution forbids."

Urges Nonsegregation

Elsewhere in his minority opinion, Judge Edgerton declared "objective equality, which is clearly required, cannot here be attained without abolishing segregation."

The 27-page court decision came in the appeal of two suits brought in behalf of Negro students at Browne Junior High School. The lower court had dismissed both suits.

Attorneys Leon A. Ransom and Belford V. Lawson, jr., who represented the students and their parents, said they will seek Supreme Court review.

Already before the Supreme Court are two cases challenging the doctrine of "separate but equal" facilities in education. These cases involve the Universities of Oklahoma and Texas.

Four other suits claiming that Negro students in the District are not receiving equal education and calling for the end of segregation in public education are now pending in District Court. Two of the suits involve high school students, a third junior high, and the fourth kindergarten.

School Board Defendant

The two cases on which the Appeals Court ruled yesterday listed Superintendent of Schools Hobart M. Corning, other school officials and members of the Board of Education as defendants.

The first case arose when Marguerite Daisy Carr, a Negro student attending the overcrowded Browne School on part-time, was denied permission to enroll in the white Eliot Junior High School which offered fulltime schooling.

The second case followed after the school board, in an effort to relieve overcrowding at Browne, assigned some of the students to attend classes in elementary school buildings. The Browne Parent-Teacher Association asked the court to order the school board to

Bates Is Elected To Seat of Father, Air Crash Victim

Haverhill, Mass., Feb. 14 (AP).—Lieut. Comdr. William H. Bates tonight won the Congressional seat his late father held for 13 years. His father died in an airliner crash at Washington last November.

Complete unofficial returns from the 123 precincts in the Sixth Congressional District gave Bates 43,947 against 16,413 for Russell.

Both Republican and Democratic leaders heralded the outcome beforehand as a possible test of the "Fair Deal" in the highly industralized district made up of 26 cities and towns.

Bernice Franklin, Gambling Witness, Vanishes From D. C.

By Benjamin Bradlee
Post Reporter

Star Government gambling witness Bernice Franklin has disappeared, it was learned yesterday.

Police and prosecuting officials have been unable to locate the ex-waitress during the last 14 days.

Miss Franklin still is under subpena to appear as a Government witness February 27, when 26 indicted gamblers are scheduled to go to trial in four District Court cases.

Police are looking for Miss Franklin as a witness in trial board proceedings against policemen she implicated during the trial of her former sweetheart, Attilio Acalotti, convicted gambler.

Prosecutors are seeking Miss Franklin for the February 27 proceedings.

Disappearance of the former waitress first was suspected early this month when a high police official went looking for Miss Franklin to tell her she would be

Coal Dealers Agree to Ration Supplies as Stocks Dwindle

By Richard L. Lyons
Post Reporter

District coal dealers yesterday agreed to a request from the Commissioners for rationing dwindling supplies as the coal shortage here reached "emergency" proportions.

In addition, the Commissioners asked a fuel conservation committee to present this afternoon "a plan for more drastic conservation measures."

The rationing plan was announced after a meeting yesterday between the Commissioners, coal dealers and District and civic officials. It provides for these restrictions:

1. Anthracite coal deliveries (used chiefly in private dwellings) to be held to one ton to a customer.

2. Soft coal will be delivered only to consumers who have less than three days' supply, including surplus and inventory. No delivery will exceed more than three days' supply. This applies to commercial users.

The dealers, through their spokesman, Patrick A. Deck, promised full cooperation in rationing supplies.

Situation Outlined

Deck, chairman of the coal section of the Merchants & Manufacturers Association, gave the Commissioners this picture of the domestic and commercial coal situation here:

Dealers have about 10 days' supply of soft coal on hand, but a cold snap would reduce this figure. A thin trickle of soft coal, about 5 percent of demand, came in last week from non-union mines. Rationing might stretch existing stocks to 12 or 14 days.

Anthracite coal, which is mined three days a week, is in better supply, he said. Homeowners can get along for "some time" if they will take smaller grades—such as pea instead of nut coal.

A spokesman for one dealer, Griffith-Consumers Co., said the District is getting about one-quarter of the hard coal it needs. He estimated supplies, even with

Plans for Federal War on Syndicates Will Be Presented

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

A 10-point program for Federal legislation to smash the multi-million-dollar interstate gambling syndicates will be presented to the Attorney General's national crime conference, meeting here today.

The program has been drafted by the American Municipal Association, representing thousands of American cities. It will be presented by New Orleans' Mayor deLesseps Morrison at the gathering in the Justice Department.

Major points in the program aimed at smashing the tygoons, the modern syndicate bosses, will affect off-track horserace bookmaking and slot machines.

President to Speak

The conference, called by Attorney General J. Howard McGrath (largely, says AMA, at its insistance), will hear a talk by President Truman this morning. Other speeches will be by McGrath and representatives of the National Association of Attorneys General, the

FBI Chief Sees 'Terrifying' Gain In Sex Crimes

FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover said today there has been a "terrifying increase" in sex crimes which only an "aroused public" can halt.

Writing in the FBI Law Enforcement Bulletin, Hoover said, "Vicious attacks on women and children have increased 50 percent in the last 10 years. These terrifying figures emphasize the almost intolerable burden borne by law enforcement."

Hoover said merely arresting and jailing sex offenders is not the answer to the problem because the laws frequently call for only "token penalties."

"The solution must come from an aroused public which will insist upon adequate State statutes" against sex offenders, Hoover said.

RFC to Foreclose On Lustron Corp.; Big Loss Is Faced

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation yesterday ordered foreclosure proceedings started against the Lustron Corp., in Ohio, which owes the Government $37,500,000.

An RFC spokesman said:

"We have withheld the action for several weeks in the hope that something might be worked out to get the company onto stable ground so it could pay off its debts. Nothing concrete has resulted, and we feel we can wait no longer."

The company and the RFC both have estimated that foreclosure might result in losses as great as 30 million dollars to the Government.

Lustron operates a big prefabricated housing plant in Columbus, Ohio.

Fenwick Seeks to Retain Rent Curbs for Arlington

By Richard Morris
Post Reporter

Richmond, Va., Feb. 14.—Plans for a last-ditch battle to keep rent controls in Arlington County, but not Fairfax and Alexandria, were made in the State Senate today.

Senator Charles R. Fenwick of Arlington prepared an amendment to the House bill for State-wide repeal of rent controls which would retain ceilings in his county until lifted on recommendation of the local rent control advisory board.

His amendment will carry a similar provision for Warren County, which includes the town of Front Royal, and Danville, at the request of Senators Raymond R. Guest of Bayard, and Frank P. Burton of Stuart.

State Senator Andrew W. Clarke, who represents Alexandria and the counties of Fairfax and Prince William, said today he will not offer any amendments.

"I have always favored controls in an emergency to keep inflation down," Clark said. "But I now feel that, unless shown otherwise, the time has come for decontrol."

As for the area around Quantico Marine Base, which lies in Prince William County, Clarke said:

"All conditions at Quantico have existed under controls. I don't think decontrol of rents can make the situation any worse. The Federal Government should have had foresight enough to take care of this long ago."

Navy Orders Alexandria Plant Closed

330 to Lose Jobs At Torpedo Works; 220 Others Will Be Transferred Here

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

The Navy announced last night that the Alexandria, Va., naval ordnance plant will be closed, effective by June 30 next.

Well over half of the present 600 civil employes at the torpedo manufacturing establishment will lose their jobs under the economy order. The firings will be gradual, it was said.

The order does not affect the Franklin Street Annex of the plant, which will continue in operation overhauling torpedoes. In fact, the force of less than 100 civil workers there will be increased moderately, officials said.

220 to Be Transferred Here

Torpedo manufacture and other work now carried on at Alexandria will be transferred to the Naval Gun Factory here. Some 220 civil employes now employed at the Alexandria plant will be transferred to the Washington yard, officials said.

The Naval Torpedo Testing Range, Piney Point, Md., a branch of the Alexandria Ordnance establishment, will continue operations with its civil force unaffected by the change. There are some 25 civilians at the Piney Point range.

Both the latter and the Franklin st. branch will become "annexes" of the Naval Gun Factory here.

"Due to budgetary limitations and a reduction in peacetime requirements," said the Navy announcement, "the assignment of work to the Alexandria plant has been such as to gradually reduce its output below economical limits, considering the size of the plant."

The announcement declared that the action "will result ultimately, but not immediately, in an overall reduction of approximately 330 personnel."

Breakdown of Employment

A Navy spokesman gave this picture of the employment situation:

There now are about 700 civil workers at the plant and its annexes. About 95 will be retained at Franklin st. and 25 at Piney Point. Some 220 can be used at the Gun Factory. Normal losses of personnel should take care of the difference.

Machine tools and other equipment at Alexandria will be distributed to other torpedo-making plants or stored for use in an emergency.

The plant itself will be declared "excessive to the needs of the Navy Bureau of Ordnance." If no other defense agency wants it for storage purposes, the Navy will seek to lease it to a private company.

The Alexandria plant was first established in August, 1918, as the "Naval Torpedo Station." It built torpedoes until 1923, when an economy order made it a shop of the Washington Navy Yard.

In July, 1941, it was reopened as an ordnance manufacturing establishment, and in September, 1944, had a top employment of 4700 civilians. Present commanding officer is Capt. Bradford Bartlett, USN. He and the limited number of military personnel assigned there will be transferred to other duty.

G-Girl Deported From Reich Here, Wants to Go Right Back

Pert Joan Cecile von Goetz, deported from Germany for overstaying her residence permit, arrived at her home in Washington yesterday and said she's going back—"as soon as I possibly can."

The 15-year-old girl's deportation and her highly illegal "visit" to the Russian Zone of Germany were all part of a love story, she told reporters. She had simply fallen in love with Europe "in general."

If it's necessary to renounce her American citizenship to go back to Germany, Joan said, she's willing to do even that.

At her home at 1509 Spring pl. nw., she told a tale somewhat different from what was reported earlier in the day, when official secrecy gave the case an air of mystery.

She confirmed the fact, however, that she arrived in the United States last Sunday under guard. She had been under guard, she said, ever since her German sweetheart and she voluntarily returned to the American Zone of Germany February 1.

Wire association reports said Miss von Goetz had spent two months in eastern Germany with her German fiance. In Washington, Army sources disclosed that she was due to leave Germany "late in November or by December 1."

A secretary for the War Security Board, an Allied forces agency, her job "terminated" last summer when the State Department supplanted military rule. Last July, said the Army, she signed papers

Johnson Hits At Critics of Defense Cuts

Charges Are Called 'Rough' and 'False'; Forces of Nation Declared Adequate

Defense Secretary Louis Johnson yesterday struck back at critics of his defense cuts and declared that the armed forces now are adequate to protect the Nation.

In angry tones, he termed the recent press and congressional criticism of him as "rough" and "false" and declared he would continue his economy program "if it takes to my dying breath."

"The defenses of the United States as of today are, in the opinion of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, myself and the President, sufficient unto the needs of the hour," Johnson told a conference of United States attorneys.

Discloses New Cuts

Referring to recent attacks charging that he is "misleading" the public by statements our military forces are stronger despite the cutbacks, he repeated them and then disclosed additional cuts in civil employe rolls.

"All the charges and investigations haven't caused me to lose a single stride," Johnson declared. He added that if he hadn't been "inoculated" by the blasts against his preparedness efforts while Assistant Secretary of War from 1937 to 1940, he probably would not have been able to take it.

The Defense Secretary said he doubted whether potential enemies had the "capacity" to attack the United States, and added:

"But we must be ready so as to make them stop, look and not move."

Despite what "newspapers" say, Johnson declared, the Nation's defense plans have been approved by the Joint Chiefs, the service secretaries, President Truman and himself.

"Is Ready to Go"

"It is the plan drawn by all three services and is ready to go at 5 o'clock in the morning," he added.

There are three parts to the plan—"what we have to do, what it takes to do it, and who does it"—and all were agreed to unanimously in principle before he became Defense Secretary," he said.

Johnson said his unification and economy program must go forward for two reasons:

(1) To prevent another Pearl Harbor—an enemy might attack if it knew we lacked unity.

(2) To prevent the individual services from going overboard in budget demands. The Army, Navy and Air Force, Johnson said, still asked for 30 billion last year after whittling down their requests, and this year wanted more than 20 billion, even after the 13-billion-dollar ceiling had been set.

"The best defenses are no good if we wreck the national economy by too large a military budget," he declared.

Second Place to Security

Economy, however, takes second place to security and peace in defense councils, the Secretary added. But we must look at the lineup of forces in light of "our one potential enemy" and cut the cloth accordingly, he said.

Johnson announced that 157,542

Mutual Military Aid Pledged; Soviets Promise Return of Changchun Railway

By Henry Shapiro

Moscow (Wednesday), Feb. 15 (U.P.).—Russia and Communist China signed a 30-year treaty of alliance Tuesday to prevent aggression by Japan "or any other state which directly or indirectly would unite with Japan in acts of aggression."

The treaty, announced today in a government communique, provided that either country would "immediately render military or other aid with all the means at its disposal" should either country find itself at war as result of attacks by Japan or her allies.

(The treaty did not mention the United States, Britain or Nationalist China by name, but those countries, with Soviet Russia, are the four occupying powers in Japan.)

Divided Into Three Parts

The treaty was divided into three parts:

1. The treaty of friendship and alliance.

2. Agreements on the Chinese Changchun railway, Port Arthurs and Dairen. This agreement provided the return to China of the Manchurian railroad, now under joint control, and withdrawal of Soviet troops from Port Arthur after the peace treaty, or not later than 1952. In event of aggression, it will be used as a joint naval base. Consideration of Darien was postponed until conclusion of the Japanese peace treaty.

3. An agreement on extension of commercial and economic aid to China. This provided Russia would aid China to the extent of 300 million United States dollars calculated on the basis of 35 American dollars to one ounce of fine gold. The credits would be extended over a five-year period.

1945 Treaty Abrogated

A joint communique said Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Vishinsky and Chinese Premier and Foreign Minister Chou En-lai exchanged notes abrogating the Soviet-Chinese Treaty of 1945 and that both governments recognized the independence of Outer Mongolia.

(The 1945 treaty between Nationalist China and Russia provided joint ownership and administration of the Chinese Changchun railway connecting lower Manchuria with Vladivostok, made Dairen a free port under a Russian harbor master and made Port Arthur a joint naval base.

(Related agreements provided for a plebiscite in Outer Mongolia that later showed Mongolia's desire for autonomy).

The mutual alliance treaty also provided:

1. Cooperation in all interna-

Chary Attitude Is Taken Here Toward Red China's 'Triumph'

By Ferdinand Kuhn
Post Reporter

Judging from first reports and from the published text, the new treaty of Moscow is a diplomatic triumph for Communist China.

Communist propaganda can use it to tell the Chinese people they will get back the ports and railways they lost to Russia at the end of the war.

But the real value of the treaty will depend on the secret agreements probably attached to it, on the undisclosed price the Chinese paid, and on the way the Russians live up to their new pledges.

With these unknowns in mind, officials here were chary of commenting and were not at all inclined to take the treaty at its face value. Secretary Acheson will have his first chance to comment publicly at his press conference scheduled for this morning.

Pike Selected to Head AEC On Acting Basis After Today

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

The White House announced yesterday that President Truman would designate Sumner T. Pike as acting chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission. He will fill that post, it was indicated, pending the selection of a permanent successor to David E. Lilienthal, who resigns the chairmanship today.

Pike, 58, a native of Maine with "down East" accent and dry humor, is one of the original five atomic commissioners appointed in 1946 to take over the project from the Army.

In the past, he has acted as chairman of the AEC whenever Lilienthal was absent. Yesterday he said the new arrangement would be no different than if Lilienthal "were away a little longer than usual."

Successor Still Unknown

The White House gave no indication of who Lilienthal's replacement might be, and Pike himself said he had no idea.

Lilienthal, meantime, paid a farewell call on Mr. Truman yesterday. Coming out of the White House, he took pains to blast, as "sheer bunk" and "utter nonsense," reports that he was preparing a series of attacks on the Administration.

"What I want to do," he said, "is exactly the contrary."

For the next several weeks Lilienthal proposes to make a series of lectures and addresses. Then he will settle in Washington, do some writing, and perhaps engage in other work, as yet undisclosed.

In this, he said, "I want to try to be helpful to a man (the President) who is carrying, with optimism and great practical sense, one of the greatest responsibilities ever resting on the shoulders of a President of the United States."

Instead of "blasting, and carping and yipping," Lilienthal said, "I'd like to try to be helpful in any way I can to bring about an understanding of our problems."

He said he strongly supported the President's basic principles.

A reporter asked if Lilienthal

What was described as an authorized source at Nice said the machinery was three sections of a V-2 launching site, presumably old, bound for North Africa, possibly for transshipment elsewhere.

Liberal DP Bill Is Favored In New Line-up

Seven-Man Majority On McCarran Unit Now Critical of Measure

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

A seven-man majority of the Senate Judiciary Committee yesterday lined up for further liberalization of the previously reported McCarran displaced persons bill.

What was tantamount to a reversal of the earlier 10-to-3 committee vote for the bill came about in this way:

1. Three members of the committee, Kilgore (D., W. Va.), Graham (D., N. C.), and Ferguson (R., Mich.), filed a minority report. This charged the McCarran bill actually cuts back the number of DP admissions authorized under present law and continues many "restrictive, unfair and discriminatory provisions."

2. Two additional members, Magnuson (D., Wash.), and Kefauver (D., Tenn.), filed a supplemental statement associating themselves with the views in the minority report.

3. Two other members, O'Conor (D., Md.) and Wiley (R., Wis.) filed a "separate statement," voicing the

Baruch Hits Veto, Asks Police Unit In U. N. Reforms

By the United Press

Elder Statesman Bernard Baruch yesterday called for immediate steps to strengthen the United Nations by curbing the veto power and establishing an international police force strong enough to halt aggression.

In a telegram to Senator Paul H. Douglas (D., Ill.), the adviser to Presidents threw his unqualified support behind a Senate resolution urging U. N. reform along those lines.

The resolution proposes the United States take the lead in getting as many countries as possible to sign a new agreement "supplementing" the U. N. Charter.

Under the agreement, participating countries would contribute armed forces to an international peace-keeping force which could be ordered into action instantly by the U. N. Security Council.

In case of a veto, the force could be thrown into action by a two-thirds vote of the U. N. General Assembly.

7 D. C. Bills Cleared to House In Road of Action on FEPC

By Edward F. Ryan
Post Reporter

Seven bills were run out of the House District Committee late yesterday to stand in the way of House action today on the hotly contested Fair Employment Practices Commission legislation.

The plan to call up these bills today was assailed immediately by sponsors of the Washington home-rule bill.

They called on some 90 House members by telegram to protest use of important House time today by bringing the home-rule bill out of the District Committee and to a House vote. This would be done by getting 72 more signatures on the home-rule discharge petition. The wire said 146 Congressmen have signed of 218 needed.

One bill cleared by the District Committee calls for ending the Saturday midnight ban on drinking in Washington bars and eating places, moving "the time" up to 2 a. m. Sunday.

Another bill would let Washington firemen have a five-day week as soon as Congress supplies the money instead of delaying the end of the six-day week for six months after the funds are approved.

District Committee Chairman John L. McMillan (D., S. C.) said he would call the bills up for House action today. He was authorized to do so by a 13-to-1 committee

The long spell of rain sets no records, despite a half-inch "surplus" of rain above the normal for the month.

Charges of Shortage In CCC Do Fadeout

To Loan Agency

GAO Urges Reduction of RFC Powers

By The Associated Press

The General Accounting Office yesterday recommended that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation be divested of all authority except its money-lending power.

In a report to the Senate on the agency's operations, Comptroller General Lindsay C. Warren made several other recommendations.

Among them were:

That charges be made against RFC for services and employes furnished by other agencies.

That interest at the current rate be charged on advances to RFC.

That its operations be restricted to revolving funds appropriated for that purpose.

The activities that would be transferred to other agencies for administration would be the tin and rubber programs, and administration of foreign loans. Among the latter are a 1941 loan to the United Kingdom and Northern Ireland, on which $187,536,031 is outstanding, and a 1947 loan to the Philippine Republic on which 60 million dollars is unpaid.

Year-old charges of a 366-million-dollar shortage in the wartime accounts of the Commodity Credit Corporation vanished into thin air at a stormy session of the Senate Agriculture Committee yesterday.

Three officials of the General Accounting Office backed down on the charges they made a year ago under angry examination by the former Secretary of Agriculture, Senator Clinton P. Anderson (D., N. Mex.), and Senator Allen J. Ellender (D., La.)

The three, Frank H. Weitzel, assistant to Comptroller General Lindsay C. Warren; Irwin S. Decker, deputy auditor of corporations; and James R. Blakemore, assistant auditor of corporations, who reported the alleged "discrepancy," admitted all the funds have been accounted for.

The alleged shortage was publicized by Senator John J. Williams (R., Del.) last March in a lengthy speech on the Senate floor. He quoted from a letter and the report by GAO that methods used by CCC were slipshod, and its accounting so bad that GAO was "unable to render a favorable opinion."

The three witnesses testified that Williams had "misunderstood" their interim report for fiscal 1945. But under questioning by Ellender, they indicated they had failed to make any effort to correct Williams' statements.

The auditors explained that at the time they made the report they were unable to verify where 366 million dollars were spent. Later, they said, the books were straightened out.

Ellender fired hot questions at the witnesses for more than an hour. Finally, after repeating a question several times, he shouted: "I can't make out your answers at all. I don't know why I have to corkscrew this out of you."

Anderson, who was secretary at the time of the audit, explained that in the rush to get supplies to our armed forces, to our allies and to lend-lease and other groups, the CCC books were confused when the audit was begun. Further, it was pointed out, many of the most competent auditors in both CCC and GAO were in the armed forces.

Weitzel promised Ellender that hereafter GAO would watch congressional proceedings and correct members of Congress when they were making incorrect statements.

AFL Indorses Cooperative Housing Bill

Post Reporter

The American Federation of Labor yesterday strongly indorsed the Administration's new housing bill, especially its cooperative features for the middle-income group.

At the same time another housing problem was raised again when the Machinists Union told Congress it would have to ask "proportionately greater" wage boosts if rent controls are abandoned.

AFL President William L. Green told the House Banking and Currency Committee private industry has failed to meet the needs either in quantity or quality of the middle-income groups.

He asked members of Congress to see for themselves by visiting a number of private housing projects in the Washington metropolitan area.

According to a U. S. Department of Labor report, Green said, only 12 percent of the more than 11,000 apartment units started here during the third quarter of 1949 had 4½ or 5 rooms, and not one had more than five rooms.

The Machinist, organ of the independent union, published a letter signed by A. J. Hayes, president, asking congressional leaders to extend rent controls. The present law expires June 30 and hearings on its extension have been tentatively scheduled for April. Hayes declared that in some areas where controls have been dropped, rents have increased from 25 to 40 percent.

The Right Rev. Msgr. John O'Grady, secretary of the National Conference of Catholic Charities, again reiterated his support for the housing bill.

"It is hard for many of us who are interested in philanthropic enterprise as part of the democratic way of life to understand the attitude of many fine, sincere businessmen toward cooperatives," he said. "I have always regarded cooperatives as one of the strongest bulwarks against a totalitarian or socialistic state."

Excise Cut Would Save $8,171,055 for Area

The 50 percent proposed by President Truman in some of the Federal excise taxes would save residents of the District and Maryland about $5,611,055 a year, while Virginians would save an estimated $2,560,000.

Capt, whose husband was director of the Bureau of Census from 1941 until his death last year; Secretary Sawyer, and Francis W. Reichelderfer, director of the Weather Bureau since 1938

Three Commerce Department officials were among 17 who yesterday received the department's highest award, a gold medal for "outstanding contribution to public service, the Nation or humanity."

The three are Leo Otis Colbert, director of the Coast and Geodetic Survey; Francis W. Reichelderfer, director of the Weather Bureau; and Thomas H. MacDonald, commissioner of public roads.

Commerce Secretary Sawyer presented a gold medal to Mrs. J. C. Capt, the widow of the late director of the Census.

Eighty-six other employes received silver medals, and 23 received bronze pins for 40 years' service at a ceremony at the Departmental Auditorium.

The other gold medal winners were Charles J. Hubbard, Weather Bureau; George Wythe and Emil E. Schnellbacher, Office of International Trade; H. Walker Percy, Lloyd H. Simson and John H. Geisse, Civil Aeronautics Administration.

Joseph S. Bright, Herbert S. Fairbank, Lawrence I. Hewes, and Edwin W. James, Bureau of Public Roads; Leon E. Treusdell, Census Bureau; Frederick D. Rossini and Deane B. Judd, Bureau of Standards; and Harold E. McComb, Coast and Geodetic Survey.

CIO Urges Income-Tax Shifts

By the United Press

The CIO urged Congress yesterday to enact an "ability-to-pay" tax program that would provide cuts for low income families and boosts for the wealthy and big-profit corporations

Stanley Ruttenberg and Solomon Barkin, CIO research experts told the House Ways and Means Committee Truman's tax proposals are good as far as they go, but they don't go far enough.

The President has recommended a 600-million-dollar cut in excise taxes, plugging of tax loopholes to make up the loss, and a one-billion-dollar boost in corporation tax revenue.

The CIO said Congress should go even further, and:

Boost the personal income tax exemption, which now is $600 a person. Large families with low income would benefit most.

Repeal the 1948 provision that permits married couples to file separate individual returns. The CIO said it "gives major relief to individuals with incomes between $10,000 and $100,000."

Approve an excess profits tax that "will get at the exorbitant profits of some of our major corporations."

Give special tax advantages to corporations that distribute most of their profits in dividends to stockholders, where they can be taxed at the individual income tax rate.

The United Brewery and Distillery Workers Union (CIO) urged the committee to cut the tax on alcoholic beverages, which Mr. Truman did not mention.

The committee also heard a host of witnesses oposing the President's proposal to cut the special tax allowance for the oil and gas industry from 27½ percent to 15 percent.

Among them were Representatives A. S. (Mike) Monroney (D., Okla.) and Robert F. Rich (R., Pa.), both from oil-producing States.

Brannan Assails Farm Law as Inadequate

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

American farmers were warned by Agriculture Secretary Charles F. Brannan yesterday that the present farm law is both inadequate and in danger.

Brannan, apparently with the multi-million-dollar potato scandal in mind, told the North Carolina Farm Bureau that the public is getting fed up with price support operations.

Present farm legislation, he said, "is arousing angry repercussions against the whole price support structure by consumers, who bitterly resent paying tax support dollars to raise prices of perishables against themselves in the market, while the perishables are disposed of in uneconomic ways."

Campaign for Farm Vote

Brannan's fighting speech was accepted in most quarters as the opening gun in the Administration's campaign for the farm vote in this year's congressional elections.

Several times Brannan threw down the gauntlet to the national leadership of the Farm Bureau before its North Carolina members. To many of his remarks sounded like a challenge to the bureau federation to carry its fight against the so-called Brannan Plan to the polls this fall.

Brannan didn't make the speech in person. He was confined to his home here with a cold that cost him his speaking voice. Instead, it was read by Undersecretary Albert L. Loveland, himself a prospective candidate for Senator from Iowa against Bourke B. Hickenlooper. Just before he went to Raleigh, Loveland visited with a group of Iowa Farm Union members who were here to urge him to make the race.

Law Now Discriminatory

Price support legislation now on the books, Brannan declared, is discriminatory because it supports less than half the farm income. It "is not adequate," he said, to maintain farm buying at a fair level. It assures support on commodities which bring in only about two-fifths of the American farmers' gross income. It fails to provide an adequate method of support for "non-storable commodities which bring in the greater part of farm income."

"Even though the present support levels of a few commodities, such as tobacco and cotton, may seem fairly satisfactory, let's face the fact that one part of agriculture can't remain healthy if others are not healthy. Nor can the national economy maintain prosperity if agriculture is depressed."

The Administration's proposals, he said, would eliminate many of these difficulties. Present methods would be used for storage, he said, and added:

Two Benefits to Public

"For non-storables we would add support by direct payments to farmers rather than depending solely on purchases which take products off the market and in this way keep the price artificially high.

"Prices of perishables would be allowed to seek a supply and demand level. If this supply and demand operation carried the price below the support point, producers would be paid directly the difference between the actual average market price and the support legal.

This, he said, would bring the public these two benefits:

1. Consumers "would then have the benefits of the entire supplies of meat, dairy, and poultry products."

2. "The taxpayers would get a return in lower food prices for his price support dollars."

Say It Isn't So

Government officials and leaders of his own party many times have had cause to be disturbed at President Truman's faculty for saying the wrong thing at the wrong time. The latest outbreak of foot-in-mouth disease on the part of the chief executive hit Waltham Watch Company at a most inopportune moment.

Mr. Truman, it should be pointed out, has promised much to Waltham's precision industry and given less than nothing.

By less than nothing we mean that he has dismissed this vital concern without even waiting for the results of a study he himself had asked for concerning Waltham's essentiality to the national defense.

He has consistently failed to do anything in Waltham's behalf despite his oft-quoted statement that no segment of American industry would be harmed by reciprocal trade.

His off-the-cuff statement that "everything possible" has been done for Waltham is puzzling indeed. By everything he can't mean tariff or quota relief. Neither the State Department nor the Tariff Commission has acted despite incontrovertible proof the Swiss import flood has strangled the domestic watch industry.

By everything he can't mean RFC assistance. About all the RFC did was to pay off banking indebtedness and enable the firm to capitalize on its inventory—through a half-price sale. That was something to be grateful for, of course. But RFC advanced no reasonable amount of working capital, and is now reluctant to release part of $2,000,000 earmarked for machinery despite the fact that the concern's asset value is far in excess of its debt.

No, Mr. Truman, we don't think everything has been done for Waltham. We believe a tragic disservice is being done the country's security by your casual dismissal, which so ironically came within an hour of the time when the Munitions Board was reaffirming Waltham's vital defense role.

The President's aides say he wouldn't want to be directly responsible for barring the firm from a chance to reopen. Well, Mr. Truman, just say it isn't so. Tell us it really counts to be a 100 per cent producer of timing mechanisms during wartime. Tell us that 2300 jobs mean something.

If Waltham is expendable, won't Elgin or Hamilton be next?

Bernice Franklin, Key Witness, Gone

required as a trial board witness. He could not find her.

Miss Franklin testified in December that "Detective Burns, Sergeant Fredette and Private Morrison" were regularly paid off by Acalotti. She described "Officer Winters and Sergeant McCarthy" as associates, and said that Winters bet the numbers with Acalotti.

Detective Sergt. Charles Burns and Sergt. Arthur Fredette both denied the pay-off charges at the trial. Private Kenneth A. Winters also denied from the witness stand that he bet with Acalotti. Detective Sergt. John H. McCarthy did not testify at the Acalotti trial, but denied "associating" with the convicted gambler.

Investigation Ordered

As a result of Miss Franklin's charges, Inspector George R. Wallrodt was ordered to investigate.

Burns and Fredette have been transferred since Wallrodt started his inquiry. Police said there was no Private Morrison on the force.

No formal announcement has been made of trial board proceedings stemming from the Wallrodt investigation. But Wallrodt was in daily attendance at District Court gambling trials in which Miss Franklin's was a witness. It is expected that trial board action will be taken at the conclusion of his inquiry, either to clear the officers involved, or punish them.

Wallrodt said yesterday he could not comment on Miss Franklin's disappearance or impending trial board action.

Government officials say they expect their chief witness to be present in court February 27, but their investigators also have been unable to locate her.

Miss Franklin left her apartment at 1750 16th st. nw., on February 3 or 4, according to the switchboard operator at the Ambassador Apartments. She has not been back since. Her apartment has been redecorated since her departure.

The ex-waitress, who turned state's evidence a year ago to become the Government's best witness in United States Attorney George Morris Fay's gambling investigation, quit her job on February 1. She was last employed in the cocktail lounge of the Commodore Hotel under her maiden name, Bernice Flood.

Strongest indication that Miss Franklin has gone for good came from her mother. She has told authorities that she received a letter from her daughter, enclosing the key to her apartment. In the letter postmarked in Washington, Miss Franklin asked her mother to collect her clothes and possessions.

Life As Witness Ordeal

Miss Franklin's life as a government witness has been an ordeal of embarrassment, and dilemma.

She first revealed her knowledge of the District underworld to The Washington Post in February, 1949. She was taken immediately to the authorities.

Since then she has been in District Court or at the Justice Department more than 50 times, either to be interviewed or to testify.

She has been threatened more than once, and Acalotti has been convicted of threatening her.

Three months after she decided to turn State's evidence against Acalotti, Miss Franklin wavered briefly, and returned to his affections, although she never changed her story.

Helped to Make Cases

She spent the summer aiding Fay's investigators make cases against the men she helped to indict.

Then she testified against Acalotti, and was subjected to savage cross-examinations which reduced her to tears and made her angry.

Next, she asked that a new subpena served on her be quashed, because she had been "subpenaed to death." She said she had been unable to hold a job because her appearance was required so often by Government authorities. She declared that the notoriety which has surrounded her testimony also had made it difficult for her to keep a job.

She said she was broke.

Testified At Trial

But she testified in the trial in which William "Snags" Lewis, Acalotti and Frank Billeci were convicted of operating a numbers lottery, described as a multi-million dollar operation.

At the end of that trial in January she was served with another subpena, requiring her appearance in District Court February 27.

Meantime, she learned that she would also have to testify as a witness against the policemen she implicated.

Blonde Who Accused Husband Of Murder Returned to Texas

ON THE ROAD BACK—Diana Heaney Johnson chats with Texas Ranger Frank Probst outside United States Commissioner's office yesterday before returning to Amarillo, Tex., scene of a slaying which she says she witnessed

Pretty Diana Jean Johnson, 18, who told Washington police she watched her husband kill a man in Texas last June, was en route back to the Lone Star State last night.

The young blonde presented a neat appearance when she appeared before U. S. Commissioner Cyril S. Lawrence yesterday to waive extradition.

Commissioner Lawrence first dismissed two FBI charges against her — transportation of a stolen automobile across a State line and unlawful flight to avoid prosecution for which she had been held in $20,000 bond.

An FBI official said the Justice Department is willing to let her go to Texas because she has agreed to "face any and all charges against her, including murder."

Mrs. Johnson was returned to the custody of the Metropolitan Police Department and immediately was handed over to Texas Ranger Frank Phobst and Deputy Sheriff W. W. Riner of Amarillo. They left at once by train for Amarillo.

Meanwhile, the husband, Ewald Johnson, 32, was being returned to Texas from Munising, Mich., where he was arrested after his wife confessed to local authorities.

The FBI and Michigan police last week announced that Johnson had confessed to killing W. A. (Tex) Thornton eight months ago in an Amarillo tourist cabin.

Keleher Received $148,000 From Oil Man, Court Told

By Joseph Paull
Post Reporter

Checks totaling more than $148,000 received by John B. (Dapper Jack) Keleher, 68, from John L. Sullivan, Texas oil man, were placed yesterday in the District Court record.

The checks, the court was told, represented a part of the "wagering" transactions between Keleher, a big-time gambling figure, and Sullivan over the 1943-1947 period. The checks did not reflect any sums that Keleher might have paid back to Sullivan.

The canceled checks were introduced in evidence on behalf of Mrs. Anna T. (Dolly) Keleher, 51, who insists that her estranged husband makes far more than the $20,000 a year average that he admits.

Mrs. Keleher, before Judge Charles F. McLaughlin, is asking for a limited divorce on grounds of cruelty and for an increase in her $100 weekly maintenance. Keleher, in turn, wants an absolute divorce for desertion.

Ward H. Oehmann, Keleher's tax attorney, said 'Dapper Jack' had a real estate business and a "wagering" business, retiring from the latter activity in January, 1948.

Prior to that time, however, according to Oehmann, Federal income tax authorities began scrutinizing Keleher's records and demanded to know where Keleher got $35,000 cash with which to buy General Motors stock.

It was for the purpose of showing the source of this money, Oehmann said, that Keleher obtained the checks, the largest of which was for $37,400.

In prior testimony, Sullivan had been identified by Mrs. Keleher as a "multimillionaire Texas oilman" who was interested in race horses.

Oehmann said that Keleher kept exact daily records of his transactions. In the middle of the sheet Keleher placed a name or symbol representing the bettor, and on opposite sides of the notation was jotted down the winnings or losses, the lawyer testified.

J. Andrew Oehmann, father of the tax attorney and a certified public accountant who worked on Keleher's tax returns, said he understood that Keleher was in the "bookmaking" business. He also said Keleher kept complete records, even reporting to tax authorities that he was a gambler.

The accountant said he understood Keleher contacted Sullivan in 1948 in connection with some "bets" and how they were settled.

Oehmann acknowledged he was ignorant of the details of gamblers, but said that they do most of their business in cash, keep money in safe deposit boxes and have few "tangible" indications of their income.

"I have gotten," Oehmann insisted, "what I considered was a statement of his full income. If I thought for one minute that he had other income, I would never have filed his returns."

The Washington Post
MRS. JOAN LANGLOTZ
divorce case witness

Oehmann said Keleher reported income varrying from $10,000 to $50,000 yearly during the past 25 years.

James J. Laughlin, Mrs. Keleher's attorney, then placed on the stand Mrs. John Langlotz, 21, of 3221 Connecticut ave. nw., who said that in 1948 she went to Atlantic City with Mrs. Keleher, her aunt.

Mrs. Langlotz said that she went into the hall outside Keleher's hotel room and heard him say, "Come on Dottie, we have to meet Alvin for a dinner date."

Mrs. Keleher has named Mrs. Dorothy S. (Dottie) Blake, 46, as the "other woman." Attorney Alvin L. Newmyer represents both Keleher and Mrs. Blake.

Mrs. Margaret Liss, 2500 Q st. nw., testified she had seen Mrs. Blake and Keleher dining at Harvey's, dancing at the Shoreham Hotel, and dining in Miami Beach at a "nice" hotel. Mrs. Liss said that she drove Mrs. Blake's Cadillac automobile from Georgia to Washington n March, 1949.

Home Party Ends in Slaying

A 33-year-old Washington woman was fatally stabbed in the neck early yesterday during a party at her home, described by police as a private "club."

The victim, Mrs. Jessie M. Martin, 33, of 1623 Marion st. nw., died at 6:05 a. m. at Freedmen's Hospital—an hour and a half after the affray. Her husband, Walter, 55, also was stabbed. He was treated at the hospital, then released.

Police said the Martins' assailant was Robert Carter, 24, of 1449 U st. nw. Carter yesterday was ordered held for the grand jury after an inquest at the morgue.

Homicide Detective Theodore Haage said eight people—including the dead woman and her husband—were in the party.

None of the participants of the affray could tell police what happened.

Crime Parley Meets Today In War on Gaming Rackets

National Institute of Municipal Law Officers and the United States Conference of Mayors. AMA's president, Mayor Quigg Newton, of Denver, will be chairman.

The big uncertainty about the one-day gathering appears to be whether it will be just a one-day wonder. If Los Angeles' Mayor Fletcher Bowron, an old foe of organized gambling, has his way, that won't be the case.

Bowron Wants Action

Bowron, who called on President Truman yesterday, later told reporters he doesn't want this to be "just a place where they'll talk things over and then kiss them off."

Bowron also told reporters that Mickey Cohen, gangster, was "just a disreputable little bum" and a "little punk" who is "taking the bows and publicity." The mayor said Cohen, often linked with New York's Frankie Costello in talk about inter-State gambling, "is not a safe man—they're moving him out." Cohen's Los Angeles home recently was rocked by a bomb blast but he escaped unhurt.

Costello Important

Morrison said his organization considers Costello "the most important figure in interstate gambling operations." He previously has charged Costello attempted to defeat him at the polls, but Morrison recently was reelected by the largest vote in New Orleans history.

Bowron told reporters the interstate crime business is "just too big for the local police to cope with" and that Federal laws are necessary.

The mayor said he was heartily in favor of the Kefauver resolution for a full scale Senate investigation of interstate rackets. He also said he is for a ban on interstate shipment of slot machines, on use of telephones for race results to bookies, for an anti-racketeering bill and for control by the Federal Communications Commission of dissemination of race results.

Bowron said he was "greatly disturbed" by "indications that big time operators are making big contributions and getting into politice." He said he was not an investigator and could not name names, however.

Denver's youthful Mayor Newton was more cautious than either Bowron or Morrision. He told reporters he doubted if any specific recommendations for legislation will come from today's session, but that "continuing machinery" may be set up for cooperation between Federal, State and local officials.

"What we need to combat organized syndicated crime," Newton said, "is organized syndicated law enforcement."

Newton said the non-Federal delegates "are not here to dump the problem in the lap of the Federal officials, because we do have a responsibility in our own jurisdictions. But those jurisdictions are limited. Together we can solve it, but without co-operation it is difficult for anyone to solve it."

Montgomery Attacks Costello's Citizenship

New York, Feb. 14 (U.P.).—Robert Montgomery, movie actor, visited Federal Court today in an effort to start Government action to revoke the citizenship of Frank Costello, reputed underworld czar. He said he had been investigating Costello since November 1, 1949.

Montgomery signed an affidavit seeking to have the U. S. Attorney start a citizenship suit against Costello. The affidavit claimed Costello obtained his citizenship fraudulently, since when he filed his petition in 1925 he was violating the national prohibition act, and was not paying State or Federal income taxes on his bootleg profits.

The affidavit quoted Costello's court testimony in 1943 admitting being a bootlegger and not paying taxes until 1932.

Home Rule Talk Set

Gerhard Van Arkel, counsel to the Senate District Committee, will address a luncheon group at 1 p. m. today at the American Veterans Committee Clubhouse, 1751 New Hampshire ave. nw. He will speak on "Home Rule and the District of Columbia."

'Los Angeles Capone' Sought As Police Round Up 5 Aides

Los Angeles, Feb. 14 (AP).—An intensive hunt was on tonight for Italian mobster Jack Dragna, described by Gov. Earl Warren's California Crime Commission as the "Capone of Los Angeles."

Four of Dragna's relatives and an associate were jailed on suspicion of assault with intent to murder Gambler Mickey Cohen, whose Brentwood home was recently bombed. Jack Dragna, 55-year-old leader, made his getaway and may have fled into Mexico, authorities said.

Jack Dragna, the Crime Commission report said, is a member of the Mafia, Sicilian underworld organization, and, like Cohen, inherited his power from the late Benjamin (Bugsy) Siegel, slain here in 1947.

In police custody are Louis Dragna, 29, Jack's nephew; Tom Dragna, 61, Louis' father; Frank Paul Dragna, 26, Jack's son; Frank Dragna, 28, Tom's son, and Guillermo Adamo, 54.

Cohen, apprised of the Crime Commission's report that he "has no appetite for a struggle" with Dragna and once curtailed his operations when he invaded a territory Dragna considered his own, replied that Dragna is "one of my closest friends and not a rival of any kind, and as far as I know his only business is importing bananas and olive oil."

The commission says Dragna concentrates on wire services, while Cohen specializes in forming associations of bookmakers for protection, telephoned racing news, assistance in collecting bets and other benefits.

There is a close business and social acquaintance between Cohen and Arthur H. Samish, the legislative lobbyist sometimes referred to as "the secret boss of California," the Crime Commission says, and Cohen admits he has known Samish "since I was a little prize fighter."

Premiere of Reed Mexican Score Tonight

The premiere performance of "La Fiesta Mexicana" will be given at 8:15 tonight at the weekly concert of the United States Marine Band at the Marine Barracks, 8th and I sts. se.

The work is a musical impression of composer Owen Reed's recent visit to Mexico. The band also will present George Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue."

Yesterday's Washington Post erroneously reported the concert would be held Tuesday night. The Post regrets the error.

VFW Urges 1951 End of Marshall Plan

Marshall Plan funds to Europe should be stopped at the end of 1951 and the money diverted to tighten the Nation's security program, the Veterans of Foreign Wars' national security committee decided here yesterday.

In a resolution passed unanimously, the committee asserted that a "rapid diminution" of Marshall Plan spending would serve as a "deterrent" to deficit spending.

"Such aid," the resolution stated, "should be limited to such technical and material assistance as is vital under the Atlantic Pact agreement."

A program to develop both offensive and defensive Air Force planes with diverted funds was favored during discussion of the resolution as a means of increasing security.

In a second resolution, the Security Committee proposed a plan that would utilize veterans to prevent sabotage in key defense industries.

The sabotage resolution proposed that veterans could cooperate with the FBI in anti-sabotage work, including vet infiltration into "subversive groups."

The action came on the eve of a two-day convention of national and State VFW officers at the Statler Hotel.

Meantime, the VFW's national legislative committee passed a strongly worded resolution condemning the housing and home finance agency's proposal that a home-loan program for veterans be established within the framework of the FHA.

The VFW group said it was "convinced" that the Veterans' Administration was the "best and most effective agency for this."

A second legislative committee resolution favored congressional approval of the President's request for an additional 500 million dollars to carry out a secondary market program for 4 percent GI home loans.

Arlington Defers Action On Store Site

The Arlington County Board last night deferred action until February 25 on proposed rezoning from commercial to residential of a proposed site for an Arlington Woodward & Lothrop branch.

The site, in the 400 block S. Glebe rd., is now owned by Vaughn & Usilton, Inc. The county board originally zoned it to commercial in 1946, with the understanding the store would be built in the area. The rezoning back to residential was proposed by the board last month.

The county planning commission submitted no definite recommendation on the rezoning last night, but its chairman, Carroll Wright, said there was need for a business area in the region to serve Lee blvd. traffic which might be attracted to future shopping centers over the line in Fairfax.

William E. Daly, 312 S. Ivy st., representing property owners in the area, said the additional commercial development in the area was not needed in the foreseeable future."

Thomas W. Phillips, representing Vaughn & Usilton, told the board that the store will be built as soon as it is possible to clear away certain "obstacles."

He referred to legal action brought by Day and still pending in Arlington Circuit Court that would prevent closing a street platted on the tract.

Two Changes Made In World Fund Board

Two recent changes in the Board of Executive Directors of the International Monetary Fund were announced yesterday.

J. V. Joshi has been appointed an executive director by the Government of India to succeed B. K. Madan, and Leslie Frederick Crick has been appointed an alternative executive director by the Government of the United Kingdom to succeed Geoffrey Howson Tansley.

Churchill Proposes Top-Level Big 3 Talks

Edinburgh, Feb. 14 (AP).—Winston Churchill tonight urged a new Big Three conference to reach a truce in the hatreds between the Eastern and Western worlds.

If Conservatives win Britain's General election nine days hence, the participants in any such conference presumably would be Churchill, Josef Stalin and President Truman.

Churchill said:

"The idea appeals to me of a supreme effort to bridge the gulf between the two worlds so that each can live their life, if not in friendship, at least without the hatreds of the cold war."

The wartime prime minister said American "superiority" in the atomic bomb was tonight "the surest guarantee of world peace," and added:

"It is my earnest hope that we may find our way to some more exalted and august foundation for our safety than this grim and somber balancing power of the bomb."

"It is not easy to see how things could be worsened by a parley at the summit, if such a thing were possible," he argued.

"But we must not, however, cast away our only shield of safety unless we can find something better and surer and more likely to last. When I say 'we' I must not let you forget that 'we' means the United States and that it is their power which protects not only Britain, but Europe."

Swede Held Guilty of Espionage

Stockholm, Feb. 14 (U.P.).—Goesta Mittag Leffler, member of a prominent Swedish family, today was found guilty of esponage and sentenced to 18 months imprisonment.

Leffler, a businessman and former Swedish army captain, was found guilty of trying to sell to a foreign diplomat a map showing the network of power plants in Sweden.

The diplomat, who informed sources said was not a Russian, rejected Leffler's offer made last summer and reported him to the defense staff. The diplomat was not named.

Leffler pleaded innocent, saying information on the map could be obtained from encyclopedias and that the map never was delivered or paid for.

The judge ruled that the systematic mapping and compiling of facts about the plants clearly proved it was done for "spying purposes."

Leffler is the son of a Stockholm professor and nephew of the well-known mathematician, Goesta Mittag Leffler.

Indo-China Makes Bid For U. S. Aid

By Seymour Topping

Saigon, Indo-china, Feb. 14 (AP).—Vietnamese Premier Nguyen Phanlong promised today to defeat what the French say are the Communist-led Nationalists in six months if his government gets American military and economic aid.

Nguyen wants about 146 million dollars for economic rehabilitation and to raise a national army for his new state. He said Vietnam can look only to the United States for such aid because France cannot provide it.

The 60-year-old Premier of former Emperor Bao Dai's government said six million dollars is needed urgently to build up Vietnamese troops in northern Vietnam. The largest part of France's Indo-Chinese garrison, estimated at 130,000 troops, is concentrated there, fighting the main Vietminh nationalists forces of Moscow-backed Ho Chi-Minh and guarding the Chinese border.

Nguyen asked 40 million dollars to create a Vietnamese national army of 200,000. About 40,000 Vietnamese are now fighting with the French. He urged the shipment of surplus American war material to Vietnam.

(Authoritative sources in Paris said France has given the United States a partial list of arms needed to fight Ho's army, including light tanks, reconnaissance cars, jeeps and small arms ammunition.)

President Truman yesterday signed a bill which will pour up to 88 million dollars of American economic aid into Korea and Formosa within the next 4½ months.

Czechs Admit 2 Americans Are in Jail

Prague, Feb. 14 (AP).—Spy-conscious Czechoslovakia announced today that two American Mormon missionaries, missing more than a fortnight, are under arrest on charges of trying to enter a prohibited area.

Officials refused to shed any light on what or where the prohibited area was that Stanley E. Abbott, 23, of Lehi, Utah, and C. Aldon Johnson, 22, of Idaho Falls, Idaho, tried to enter.

It has been rumored Czechoslovakia has set up a belt from three to nine miles wide around her frontier, which requires special permission to enter. This belt apparently was established in an effort to prevent Czechs from fleeing the country.

Abbott and Johnson, it is known, vanished January 28 while traveling through Moravia to visit homes of church members at Bruntal and Opava, close to the Polish border.

Thirteen Children Cover Alphabet From A to Z

Bonifay, Fla., Feb. 14 (AP).—When Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Bowlin say "We've got children from A to Z" they really mean it.

The Bowlins, who recently celebrated their golden wedding anniversary, have 13 children.

Beginning with Audie Bryant, who was born October 18, 1900, here's how the alphabetical family progressed:

Curtis Drue, Era Faye, Grady Hampton, Ida Jeanette, Knola Leantha, Millard Nathan, Olivia Penelope, Quincy Ruth, Sarah Thelma, Ulysses Vinson, Wilson Xava and Yon Zircle, who was born June 29, 1928.

GI on Trial Here for Murder

Twenty-year-old Pfc. Stanley F. Edelbaum of Brooklyn, N. Y., could not distinguish right from wrong last May 8 when he strangled to death a Hungarian streetwalker in Paris, an Army court-martial at Bolling Air Force Base was told yesterday.

The testimony came from Dr. Alexander Swell, a Red Bank, N. J., physician who had been Edelbaum's psychiatrist from the time of the GI's arrest until last August. Dr. Swell then was assistant chief of Army psychiatric service at Wiesbaden, Germany.

He said Edelbaum even now cannot distinguish right from wrong and act accordingly. He described his former patient as having a severe case of schizophrenia (split personality).

Among his reasons for the diagnosis, Dr. Swell listed the fact that Edelbaum went to a movie with a second prostitute immediately after the murder; that he could not distinguish the activities of either woman; that he wrote a "gruesome" letter to his mother describing the murder, and that he had no instinctive reaction to prevent arrest for the murder.

Found insane by an Army board in Germany, Edelbaum was sent to Walter Reed Hospital. At the hospital, however, he was declared sane and sent to trial in Germany. The court-martial began in Germany and was reconvened here to hear the psychiatrists.

The trial will be continued today.

3. Neither nation will conclude any alliance directed against the other nor participate in a coalition directed against the other.

4. Equality in joint interests with joint respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity and non-intervention in the internal affairs of the other country.

5. Strengthening of economic and cultural ties and rendering each other every possible economic aid.

6. China and Russia will work together for world peace through the United Nations.

9 Weeks of Negotiations

The treaty was signed after nine weeks of negotiations between Premier Josef Stalin and Vishinsky on the one hand and Mao Tze-tung and Chou-En-lai on the other.

Other agreements provided that Russia would return property acquired by Soviet economic organizations from Japanese properties in Manchuria and that Russia would give Peiping all buildings of the former military settlement there.

While the agreement was being announced, Deputy Premiers V. M. Molotov and A. I. Miloyan, and other members of the Politburo, were being entertained by the Chinese delegation at the Hotel Metropole.

The official announcement said the negotiations "took place in an atmosphere of cordiality and friendly mutual understanding" and that they confirmed the striving of both sides to strengthen and to develop in every way the relations of friendship and cooperation between them, as well as their desire to cooperate for the purpose of guaranteeing general peace and the security of the nations.

Text of Communique Read by Moscow Radio

London, Feb. 14 (AP).—Following is the text of the communique on the Moscow radio announcing the treaty between the Soviet Union and Communist China, as heard by the Soviet monitor here:

"In the course of a recent period negotiations have taken place in Moscow between J. V. Stalin, chairman of the Council of Ministers of the USSR, and A. Y. Vishinsky, USSR Minister of Foreign Affairs, on the one hand and Mr. Mao Tze-tung, chairman of the Central Government of the Chinese People's Republic and Mr. Chou En-lai, Premier of the State Administrative Council and Foreign Minister of the People's Republic, on the other hand, during which important political and economic problems on relations between the Soviet Union and the Chinese People's Republic were discussed.

"The negotiations, which took place in an atmosphere of cordiality and friendly mutual understanding, confirmed the striving of both sides to strengthen in every way and to develop relations of friendship and cooperation between them as well as their desire to cooperate for the purpose of guaranteeing general peace and the security of the nations. The negotiations were ended by the signing in the Kremlin February 14 of:

"1. A treaty of friendship, alliance and mutual aid between the Soviet Union and the Chinese People's Republic.

"2. Agreements on the Chinese Changchun railway, Port Arthur and Dairen, under which, after the signing of the peace treaty with Japan, the Chinese Changchun railway will pass into complete ownership of the Chinese People's Republic while Soviet troops will be withdrawn from Port Arthur.

"3. Agreements by which the government of the USSR will give to the government of the Chinese People's Republic a long term economic credit for payments of deliveries of industrial and railway equipment from the USSR.

"The above-mentioned treaty and agreements were signed on the part of the USSR by Mr. A. Y. Vishinsky and on the part of the Chinese People's Republic by Mr. Chou En-lai."

"In connection with the signing of the treaty of friendship, alliance and mutual aid and agreement on the Chinese Changchun Railway, Port Arthur and Dalny (Dairen), Mr. Chou En-lai and A. Y. Vishinsky exchanged notes to the effect that a corresponding treaty and agreements concluded August 14, 1945, between China and the Soviet Union have become invalid and that both governments affairm complete guarantee of the independent status of the Mongolian People's Republic as a result of the referendum of 1945 and the establishment with her of diplomatic relations by the Chinese People's Republic.

"Simultaneously Mr. Chou En-lai and A. Y. Vishinsky also exchanged notes regarding a decision of the Soviet Government to hand over without compensation to the Government of the Chinese People's Republic property acquired by Soviet economic organizations from Japanese owners in Manchuria as well as on a decision of the Soviet Government to hand over without compensation to the Government of the Chinese People's Republic all buildings of the former military settlement in Peiping."

meant that he agreed with recent expressions by Secretary of State Acheson.

He said it didn't necessarily mean agreement on all details of everything, but added that the foundations of American policy are "right."

He said he expected to speak on the Town Hall radio program March 1 on "Atoms for Peace."

Lilienthal said that his own view of the atomic age is a "hopeful one" and that the President has again and again emphasized the peaceful and life-giving potentialities of the atom.

"I have not and I do not now feel that there will be an end to the world if we are not all good," he said.

He said that it was not a question of whether this country should permit the arms race to go on, but one of finding a way to end it.

Text of Treaty of Alliance Between Russia and Red China

TREATY regarding friendship, alliance and mutual aid between the USSR and the Chinese People's Republic:

The Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR and the Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China, filled with determination for strengthening friendship and cooperation between the USSR and the People's Republic of China jointly to prevent the rebirth of Japanese imperialism and the repetition of aggression on the part of Japan, or any other state which would unite in any form with Japan in acts of aggression, and filled with desire to strengthen and prolong peace and universal security in the Far East and throughout the world, in accordance with the objectives and principles of the United Nations organization;

Profoundly convinced that the strengthening of relations of good neighborliness and friendship between the USSR and the Chinese People's Republic correspond to the vital interests of the peoples of the Soviet Union and China, have decided for this purpose to conclude the present agreement and have appointed as their plenipotentiaries: For the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR Andrei Yanuarievich Vishinsky, Minister for Foreign Affairs for the USSR; for the Central People's Republic of China, Chou En-Lai, Premier of the State Administrative Council and Minister for Foreign Affairs for the People's Republic of China.

BOTH Plenipotentiary representatives after exchange of their plenary powers conducted in due form and full order have agreed on the following:

The high contracting parties undertake that they will undertake jointly all the necessary measures at their disposal to prevent any repetition of aggression and violation of the peace on the part of Japan or any other state which directly or indirectly would unite with Japan in acts of aggression.

In event of one of the agreeing parties being subjected to attack by Japan or any state allied with her, thus finding itself in a state of war, the other high contracting party will immediately render military or other aid with all the means at its disposal. The high contracting parties likewise declare their readiness in a spirit of sincere cooperation to take part in all international actions which have as their object to ensure peace and security throughout the entire world and will completely devote their energies to the speediest realization of these objects.

The high contracting parties undertake in the way of mutual agreement to work for conclusion in the shortest possible space of time, jointly with the other powers allied during the Second World War, of a peace treaty with Japan.

The high contracting parties will not conclude any alliance directed against the other high contracting party nor will they participate in any coalition or in actions or measures directed against the other party.

The high contracting parties will cooperate with each other on all important international questions touching on mutual interests of the Soviet Union and China, being guided by interests of strengthening the peace and universal security.

THE high contracting parties undertake in a spirit of friendship and cooperation and in accordance with the principles of equality in joint interests, and likewise with joint respect for state sovereignty and territorial integrity and nonintervention in the internal affairs of the other country, to develop and strengthen economic and cultural ties between the Soviet Union and China and to render each other every possible economic aid and realize the necessary economic cooperation.

The agreement comes into force immediately from the date of its ratification.

Exchange of credentials is to be effected in Peiping.

The present agreement is to remain in force for 30 years and unless one of the high contracting parties one year previous to the expiration of the agreement declares its desire to renounce the agreement it will remain in force for a further period of five years and in accordance with these regulations will be prolonged.

Done in the city of Moscow, February 14, 1950, in duplicate, each in the Russian and Chinese languages, both texts having equal force.

Signed by the authorization of the presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Soviet Socialist Republics—A. Y. Vishinsky, by authorization of the Central Peoples government of the Peoples Republic of China, Chou En-lai.

Agreement between the USSR and the Peoples Republic.

14 Japanese Diet Members Arrive In Capital Today

Fourteen members of the Japanese Diet who have been touring the United States since January 16 are to arrive back here today for a two-week visit.

They plan to fly down from New York where yesterday they visited United Nations headquarters. The group is making a 45-day "study of democracy" under the auspices of the Army.

On Thursday, the legislators will meet with Defense Secretary Louis Johnson and Army Secretary Gordon Gray, and have lunch and a press conference at the National Press Club.

'Triumph' for Mao Is Viewed Charily

Chinese will have to wait three years, and perhaps longer, to get their ports and railways back. The treaty says the Chinese will not get them until 1952, or until a Japanese peace treaty is signed.

But there is not the slightest prospect of a Japanese treaty that would be acceptable to Russia and the Western Powers. The Russians have insisted until now on having the treaty negotiated by the major powers in the Council of Foreign Ministers — Russia, China, the United States and Britain.

The United States and its Western allies have insisted even more strongly that the negotiations must include all the countries that fought in the Pacific war, among them the Philippines, Australia, India and the Netherlands.

The new Moscow treaty calls for hastening a Japanese treaty "jointly with other powers allied during the Second World War." If this means the Russians are willing now to include the smaller allies, the United States has had no hint of such a change, either in the 13-nation Far Eastern Commission or elsewhere.

The new treaty involves revision of the Yalta agreement of February, 1945, and cancellation of the treaty the Russians signed with Chiang Kai-shek's government in August of the same year.

At Yalta, acting on the advice of the military leaders to get Russia into the war against Japan, President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill agreed with Marshal Stalin on:

1. Internationalizing of Dairen, "the preeminent interests of the Soviet Union in this port being safeguarded";

2. A renewed Soviet lease of the naval base of Port Arthur, taken away by the Russo-Japanese war of 1904-5;

3. Joint Soviet-Chinese operation of the Chinese Eastern Railroad and the South Manchurian Railroad, again safeguarding "the preeminent interests of the Soviet Union";

4. Full Chinese sovereignty over Manchuria; and

5. The "status quo" in Outer Mongolia—a provision which the Russians later interpreted to mean independence.

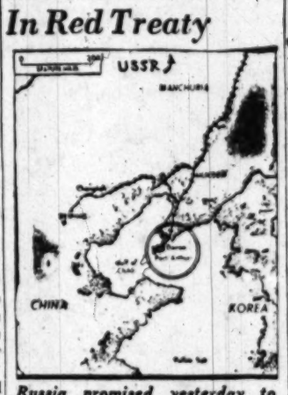
In the summer of 1945, after Chiang Kai-shek had been told of this secret agreement, his government signed a treaty of friendship and alliance with Russia reaffirming the Yalta decisions, making them more precise, and in some ways going beyond them.

Dairen was declared a free port open to all nations, but half its port installations were leased to Russia. Port Arthur was made a naval base open only to Chinese and Soviet vessels, but under Chinese civil administration.

Twice during 1947 the United States protested that its ships could not get into Dairen, in spite of the "free port" provisions of the 1945 treaty. The Russians retorted that since the state of war with Japan had not been ended, Dairen still came under the administration of the naval base at Port Arthur.

Thus the Russians announced they would not get out of Dairen until there had been a peace treaty with Japan—a position they have now taken formally in the new agreement with their Chinese Communist allies.

Salient Points In Red Treaty



Russia promised yesterday to hand back Dairen and Port Arthur (circled) when Jap peace treaty is signed, or by the end of 1952 agreeing to return rather than take a corresponding job with the State Department.

Miss von Goetz is a second cousin of Maj. Gen. James P. Hodges, chief United States member of the security board. The girl's mother, Mrs. Jean von Goetz, had harsh language for the general's "care" of her daughter.

Instead of returning to the United States on schedule, Miss von Goetz went to the Russian zone, where she was arrested and questioned. She voluntarily returned to West Berlin and surrendered to the United States consul there February 1.

Again she was arrested and questioned—this time by consular officials and the United States High Commission.

Sunday she was flown to the United States by military transport.

After a "routine check" at Westover Field, Mass., she was released late Monday afternoon. She boarded a train at Springfield, Mass., for Washington at 12:05 p. m. yesterday and arrived at 7:15 p. m.

Miss von Goetz would not give any details of her visit behind the Iron Curtain. She distinctly contradicted a letter disclosed earlier in the day by her mother concerning the motive for the trip.

To reporters last night, she said she went into the Red Zone to get a job at an East Germany movie studio. She failed, she said, but dramatics remain her major interest.

But the letter, as given out by Mrs. von Goetz, had Joan making the trip in the hope that when she returned from the Russian Zone to the American Zone, her residence permit would be extended.

The letter also told some details of the stay:

The questions asked her during her arrest by the Russians were "insulting." Every day of her stay the Russians promised her passes back to Western Germany but they never materialized.

The letters indicated to Mrs. von Goetz that it was the fiance, one Kurt Tockenburg (or Tackenburg), who gave her daughter the advice about jumping zones.

The girl was not reluctant on the point of her treatment by the Americans. She charged they treated her "like a Mata Hari," and made her feel "like a goldfish."

She and her fiance have no plans for marriage. And that agrees with what Mrs. von Goetz reported.

American officials in Berlin yesterday, in turn, contradicted Miss von Goetz's summary of her treatment. They said she was "just another American" who hadn't met their rules for residence—civilians have been fired "without injustice to anyone and not letting anyone go who was needed." This is 22,000 more than originally announced, he noted.

Declaring that "the end is not yet," he said that 11,000 more civilians—doctors, nurses, etc.—will be released with the closing of 18 service hospitals.

Work has been better done as the result of the firings, Johnson declared. This is so in units where from 30 to 50 percent of the employes were laid off, and efficiency has gone up to the extent that military personnel could be freed from desk jobs and put back on troop duty.

The Secretary's speech was extemporaneous. At times his voice quavered and then boomed out in obvious feeling. He was introduced by Attorney General Howard McGrath, who lauded Johnson's record and called him a "tremendously loyal devotee to our President." McGrath told the Federal attorneys that "we never know when the dark hour comes when we may be working for him." He added that "all of us" would be working for the Defense Secretary in an emergency.

DP Bill Liberalization Favored In New Lineup of Committee belief "that there should be further liberalization of the bill."

Uu in Senate This Month

Thus many of the controversial points in the McCarran bill, favorably reported on January 25 and slated to come up in the Senate late this month, will run into the opposition of a majority of the committee that originally voted to report it.

Along with the 3-man minority report, Kilgore, Graham and Ferguson submitted to the Senate a substitute bill generally following the lines of the more liberal House-passed measure, but retaining so-called "desirable" features of the Senate measure.

The minority report concentrated its fire on four main provisions of the McCarran bill:

Numbers—The minority charged the 330,000 total DP admissions authorized in the committee bill before June 30, 1951, actually "conceals the possibility of reducing the number of IRO displaced persons who may be resettled in the United States." It said this comes about by "cutting in" expellees on the total number of visas available to IRO displaced persons.

See Breakdown in Program

Definitions—By redefining "displaced person" to include "expellees," the three Senators said the McCarran bill "defeats a major item of American foreign policy, which is to terminate the IRO problem as soon as possible." It predicted the change in definition would "cause a breakdown in the program."

Discriminations — The minority charged the committee measure continues two "unjust and arbitrary" provisions of the present law, namely requirements that 40 percent of all visas must go to persons from the so-called Baltic areas, and a 30 percent preference for agricultural workers. (President Truman in 1948 charged such provisions were "anti-Catholic and anti-Semitic.")

Administration — The minority charged the McCarran bill "introduces new administrative complexities" by changing the present operation of the Displaced Persons commission. Praising the "satisfactory manner" in which the commission has performed its duties, and urged retention of the present set-up.

Separate Views Stated

In their "supplemental statement" to the minority report, Magnuson and Kefauver said that in voting originally to report out the McCarran bill they reserved the right to take any subsequent action they saw fit.

Explaining their original vote, Magnuson and Kewauver said the McCarran bill made "certain important improvements" in present law. They said they were further influenced by (1) the need to meet a Senate deadline and (2) limited time to study a substitute bill.

They said they now supported the minority report because it includes the "best features" of the McCarran bill and makes "very important improvements."

O'Conor and Wiley in their own "separate views" noted that in voting to report out the McCarran bill they too had reserved the right to take any later action they deemed appropriate.

Further Changes Desired

O'Conor and Wiley said the McCarran bill "made definite advances in the desirable effort to eliminate certain provisions which had been criticized as discriminatory and unjust."

"However," they added, "it is still felt that further changes and amendments are to be desired, and, undoubtedly, will be presented for consideration before the Senate."

School Segregation Upheld

assign the students to a junior high building. The parents said the students could not receive a standard junior high program in an elementary building.

"So far as the facts and circumstances shown by this record are concerned," Judge Prettyman said in the majority opinion, "it appears that the treatment accorded these Negro plaintiffs, of which they complain, would have been accorded them had they been white.

"If the separation of the races in and of itself is not constitutionally invalid, such treatment, indiscriminate as to race, is not the unequal extension of privileges which violates constitutional prohibitions."

Judge Prettymen said that Congress by legislation has "specifically provided for separation of the races in the schools of the District.

The Supreme Court, he said, has "consistently held that if there be an 'equality of the privileges which the laws give to the separated groups,' the races may be separated."

Speaking further on the constitutional issue, he said neither the framers of the Constitution nor the authors of the amendments had intended to settle the problems of "different races" by outlawing segregation.

"This is not to decry efforts to reach that state of common existence which is the obvious highest good in our concept of civilization. It is merely to say that the social and economic interrationship of two races living together is a legislative problem, as yet not solved, and is not a problem solved fully, finally and unequivocally by a fiat enacted many years ago."

Judge Prettyman said there was nothing new in the record of District schools of students attending classes on part-time or of junior high students using elementary buildings.

He said there had been many such examples "in both white and colored schools over the past 20 years."

In the dissent, Judge Edgerton drew heavily on the findings of the Strayer survey of local school conditions.

Judge Prettyman ruled out consideration of the survey, since it was not part of the record.

Comparing the white Eastern High with the Negro Cardozo, he found that Eastern had empty seats while Cardozo was on "triple shift." Students attending Eastern traveled no more than 1½ miles to school, while some Cardozo students traveled 4 miles. He said Cardozo lacked a program in homemaking taught at Eastern and did not have as good a guidance and counseling service.

Judge Edgerton said that classes at the Negro Browne Junior High were larger than at the white Eliot and he found that "overcrowding of colored classes and overloading of colored teachers begins in kindergarten.

"No argument or rationalization can alter this basic fact: a law which forbids a group of American citizens to associate with other citizens in the ordinary course of daily living creates inequality by imposing a caste status on the minority group . . .

"Congress may have been right in thinking Negroes were not entitled to unsegregated schooling when the fourteenth amendment was adopted. But the question what schooling was good enough to meet their constitutional rights 160 or 180 years ago is different from the question what schooling meets their rights now. . . .

Coal Panel Called To Session Today

Action by Board

California Council Loses CIO Charter

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

In a new move to resolve the coal strike—which showed no sign of breaking up yesterday, despite a Federal court injunction ordering its cessation—President Truman recalled the fact-finding board.

The three-man panel will meet here today to keep in contact with the negotiations between the operators and John L. Lewis' United Mine Workers, beginning at 11 a. m. in the Hotel Statler.

Cyrus S. Ching, director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, announced the President's latest coal peace action and indicated that he and David L. Cole, chairman of the fact-finding board, would sit in on some of the collective bargaining sessions.

Lewis invited the operators to meet with him today and revive collapsed contract negotiations under a "mandate" handed down here by Federal Judge Richmond B. Keech Saturday morning.

The District Court jurist, acting at the request of President Truman, also ordered an immediate end to the walkout of 370,000 UMW soft-coal miners because of a "national emergency" resulting from a coal shortage. Lewis reluctantly complied with the order and instructed his lieutenants in the coal fields to get the men back to work by Monday.

But neither Monday nor yesterday did the miners show any inclination to obey either the injunction or Lewis' instructions. The miners insist they want a contract before they start digging coal again.

The CIO executive board yesterday continued its year-old purge of pro-Communist elements in the Congress of Industrial Organizations by lifting the charter of the left-wing California State Council. Thus the board approved action taken earlier by Philip Murray, CIO president.

The board is expected to follow up today by booting out four "east-wing" affiliates — United Public Workers, United Office and Professional Workers, Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, and Food, Tobacco and Agricultural Workers.

The CIO last year expelled the United Electrical Workers and the Farm Equipment Workers on charges of following the Communist Party line. Six other accused unions are yet to be tried. They are the Fur and Leather Workers, International Longshoremen's Union, Marine Cooks and Stewards, American Communications Association, United Furniture Workers, and Fishermen's Union.

The board yesterday also adopted resolutions, among them:

Urging the United States "to do everything possible to achieve genuine disarmament and durable peace," particularly in light of the development of the hydrogen bomb.

Pledging CIO support to the maritime unions in their fight to retain hiring hall practices, outlawed by the Taft-Hartley Act under recent court decisions.

vote cast in a closed afternoon meeting.

McMillan is the last House committee chairman—in the alphabetical order of committees—to have a claim on calendar Wednesday before the turn of the Education Committee Chairman John Lesinski (D., Mich.) to call up the FEPC bill.

Today is McMillan's turn. The bills could take the entire day. FEPC sponsors said if the District legislation runs out, they will seek adjournment to prevent leaving Lesinski with the short end of the day.

Members for and against FEPC already were worrying about a possible conflict between Washington's Farewell Address and the FEPC bill. The Wednesday of next week is February 22, traditional time for reading Washington's Farewell Address to the House.

FEPC foes were pointing out it always has been read, while FEPC friends were saying it would take only 45 minutes anyway, and the rest of the time could go to the FEPC bill. Members said they had not decided what move to try next week, and that they might even seek to put FEPC over to March 1.

McMillan's committee tried for a morning meeting, missed a 13-member quorum by one, and returned shortly after 3 p. m. with 14 members present.

Of the seven bills, two already had been sent to the House. One is to incorporate the Girl Scouts. McMillan said this would be the first he will call up for debate today. The second makes United States citizenship a prerequisite for a District license to practice the healing arts.

To make doubly sure of his authority to call up the measures McMillan asked a committee vote on this point, and his action was approved 13 to 1, members said.

Representative George P. Miller (D., Calif.) said he was the minority of one. He reported he had no objection to the bills, only to their use as a means to "filibuster" against the FEPC. Several other members had agreed to boycott the committee meeting—their absence helped prevent the morning quorum.

In addition to McMillan and Miller of California, the members at the afternoon committee meeting were Representatives Harris (D., Ark.), Abernethy (D., Miss.), Smith (D., Va.), Teague (D., Tex.), Davis (D., Ga.), Morrison (D., La.), Redden (D., N. C.), Jones (D., Mo.), Beall (R., Md.), O'Hara (R., Minn.), Miller (R., Nebr.), and Wadsworth (R., N. Y.).

Beside the firemen's and drinking bills, the committee approved measures to:

Let the District Commissioners contract for the removal of sludge, a by-product of the District sewage treatment plant.

Legalize assistance by District fire companies to Maryland and Virginia units in the metropolitan area, now authorized only informally.

3. Let the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board revoke licenses of persons convicted of a felony during the year covered by those licenses. Now the board generally cannot cancel a license at the time of conviction, but must wait until the end of the year and refuse renewal.

and no cabinet of his own. Now he has both.

The agreement the Russians made at Yalta to enter the war against Japan was the only one they ever kept out of nearly 40. He has no hope they will keep any which now it would be goo- policy to seek. But he remains hopeful of the outcome.

Q. In view of your background training and dislike a debt, how do you reconcile these with your toleration of deficit spending and your advocacy of new spending programs? . . .

A. In no sense does the President tolerate deficit spending. There wouldn't be any now if the Republicans had not cut the income taxes in the Eightieth Congress. . . .

His object is steadily to expand the economy so as to provide jobs and careers for the million and a half young people who come annually into the stream of commerce. This cannot be done without the measures outlined in the Fair Deal.

Q. Your views on party obligations. . . .

A. The President does not expect 100 percent support from those elected to Congress on the same platform with him. He recognizes that local situations may require some members to refuse to follow a President on certain matters . . . but he does believe that, after a platform has been duly adopted by a convention, all those who have participated or run on that platform should generally abide by its detailed construction by the national candidate.

Q. Will you explain your use of "red herring" and "hysteria" in the context of the spy trials and hunts since you are charged (1) with not comprehending the gravity of this situation or (2) playing for votes of groups under suspicion?

A. When Mr. Truman on several occasions spoke of "hysteria" and "red herrings" . . . he was criticizing the methods employed by the Unamerican Activities Committee and by individuals in Congress and out of it. The objective of being only loyal citizens in Government service and in positions of importance and responsibility has been his fundamentally, too.

Coal Dealers to Ration Fuel

the amount coming in, would not last long beyond March 1.

Deck told the Commissioners that after the miners go back to work it will still be a week before any substantial amount of coal reaches the District.

Asked what he would recommend if the situation becomes critical, Deck mentioned possible closing of amusement places and cutting off heat in other buildings during certain hours. Local dealers will see to it, he said, that hospitals using coal are kept supplied.

An unknown factor in the supply question is the amount of coal consumers now have in their bins, Deck said.

A spokesman for H. L. Rust Co., owner of apartments and office buildings here, said apartment houses generally speaking do not have large spaces for storing coal. Most would be quickly affected by a shortage, he said.

The committee asked to report today is the same group, which dealt with the fuel oil shortage here two years ago. It consists of J. Thomas Kennedy, District superintendent of Weights, Measures and Markets, chairman; William H. Press, executive secretary of the Board of Trade, and Charles C. Koones, real estate operator.

They were asked to include in their report an estimate of amounts of coal delivered to and consumed by various categories of customers and "an arrangement of such categories . . . in order of priority."

Kennedy told the Commissioners he thought a permanent plan should be set up that could be used in future coal strikes.

District and Federal buildings and the Potomac Electric & Power Co. are relatively well supplied. Pepco has about 70 days, supply on hand, a spokesman said. The Federal Supply Service, which supplies District and Federal buildings, has a three-week supply, according to Fred Albrecht, chief of the FSS storage branch.

Confusion Rampant In NLRB Over Name

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

It seems there is a longshoreman out in San Francisco named Charles W. Ross, jr. . . . No; that's not right.

Rather, it seems there is a fellow named True Knowledge who says he has worked as a longshoreman for 27 years, who was Charles W. Ross, jr. . . . No; that's not quite correct either.

That is, True Knowledge says he didn't exist until 1935, so he's really only 15 years old, and couldn't have worked that long. And, besides, he says he isn't Charles W. Ross, jr.

Well, he doesn't exactly say he isn't; he just won't say that he is, or was. Except that it's stipulated that True Knowledge is, or was, Charles W. Ross, jr., so they must be . . . Forget it, forget it. Let's start all over with this, or them.

Began With T-H Case

It all began with a case under the Taft-Hartley Act. The charge was that Harry Bridges' International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union was operating a hiring hall on the West Coast, and was discriminating against nonunion men.

Now, the Taft-Hartley Act frowns on such goings-on. And when the Taft-Hartley Act frowns, you can be darn sure that NLRB General Counsel Robert N. Denham scowls outright.

So he set his boys to work, and they began a case before NLRB Trial Examiner Irving Rogosin in San Francisco last September. Everything went along in a perfectly normal way, with each lawyer saying that every question the other lawyer asked was irrelevent, incompetent and immaterial, and Rogosin sustaining and denying, and the lawyers taking exceptions, and everybody happy for several thousand pages of transcript.

But then came the complainant's star witness, True Knowledge. For a while, the case went on as before, with True Knowledge telling how he got the heaveho from the union after he refused to join in the 1946 strike.

Got Chill At Hiring Hall

After he got the bounce, he said, the fellows at the hiring hall gave him a chill. When there were jobs to be filled, it seems that everybody just looked right through him, without seeing him. At this point, for the purposes of the NLRB case, it became necessary to establish the fact that True Knowledge had once been a member of the union.

Everybody thought he had joined, as a charter member, in 1933, under the name of Charles W. Ross, jr. At least a registration number, the one True Knowledge carried, had been issued to Ross about 1934.

But it seems—or we have to infer—that in 1935, Ross was "converted to the recognition of the presence of God—Father Divine." Shortly after, he received his heavenly name of True Knowledge. And anything that happened before, as far as True Knowledge was concerned, didn't happen.

Dig In Their Heels

The lawyers and the trial examiner took a deep breath, dug their heels in and started to work. The transcript of the examination shows how far they got, or didn't get:

Q.: "Is True Knowledge your correct name?"

A.: "Yes."

Q.: "Has it always been?"

A.: "Yes, sir."

Q.: "When you registered on the registration list after the 1934 strike, did you register as True Knowledge?"

A. "You see, that is . . ."

There follows much talk, described later in the Trial Examiner's report as "abstruse and recondite." True Knowledge continued:

A. "Well, I don't bear record; according to my religious conviction, I am a free creature, I am walking in the light of the recognition of the presence of God on earth in a physical body . . . That gives me a new birth of freedom . . . I am a new creature, I am not living as an ordinary man. I am living as a super—I am not living a natural life but a supernatural life, a divine life, and I adhere only to my new name in God, see. I have no record of the past . . ."

Always Child of God

Q. "Prior to 1934 you were some other person?"

A. "No. True Knowledge has always been a child of God. The name should indicate that to anyone, I mean from the point of reason. I am not bearing record of anyone else but True Knowledge. If anyone wants a record of anyone else, they will have to find that person and bring him here; he will have to answer for himself."

Q. "Do you know anybody, or have you ever known anybody by the name of Charles Ross?"

A. "I bear no record of anybody but True Knowledge . . . I bear no record of such things. If you want a record of anybody who is living a human natural life subject to all the frailties and fallacies that are common to man, you will have to seek such a one out and let him give you the testimony you seek."

Presents a Poser

Now this presented the lawyers and the examiner a pretty difficult problem. If they wanted testimony from Charles Ross, it looked as if they would have to recreate him. And True Knowledge showed no signs of wishing to be de-created and then re-created back into Ross.

Finally, after 10 pages of cajoling, threatening, pleading and setting traps for him, True Knowledge told everybody off.

What happened in the early strikes, and in the organization of the union, he said, are "incidental and non-important to me. They are not the prime issues of my life.

"If you think I am a person of vice and crime like a good many others are and such as that, in the old life, I was until God picked me up and redeemed me, and I am not trying to go back to that garbage because I am not the same person . . .

Moment of Metaphysics

"You are trying to link me up with an old person of some kind, some kind of a criminal whose name is a curse to those who take it up."

Examiner Rogosin let him step down, and then said to the lawyers, "Let us have a moment of metaphysics, if we may."

In that moment all sides finally stipulated that "on the temporal level" True Knowledge and Charles W. Ross, jr., were one and the same.

But True Knowledge had the last word. He told Rogosin:

"I know those things are foolishness to man, yet the wisdom of man is foolishness to God."

The case is now before the full National Labor Relations Board for decision. It will have to find what is wise, what is foolish, and what, and who, is True Knowledge.

U. S., Russia Committed to Armament Race, Consequences of Which Can Only Be Guessed

By Ysabel and Robert Rennie

With the American decision to make a hydrogen bomb, and the probability that the Soviet Union could have one as soon as we, the two great world powers are committed to a weapons race of which we can only dimly guess the consequences.

Events are rushing swiftly past us. Washington itself is paralyzed by indecision, giving us the momentary sense of suspension in time and events.

But our minds tell us that this momentary lack of motion is an illusion such as one feels in the center of a hurricane, before the full strength of the wind strikes us again. If we do not act, it is because we are at a moment in history for which no past experience can be our guide.

There is no lack of urgent, if conflicting, advice: We should try again to reach agreement with Russia; we should at once "rearm"; or we should try to buy security with a kind of colossal international WPA.

For once the chauvists are dumb. The Fuchs case revealed the ultimate futility of hush-and-hide as a national policy. Confronted with the hydrogen bomb, we are left with no more glib answers to the problems of power and security.

All the old measures are either meaningless or so difficult to assess as to help us very little. What is the value of universal military training? Of a standing army? A navy? Of industrial power when it is concentrated and vulnerable?

Could the United States be defeated by a sneak attack aimed at our economic nerve centers? No one knows the answer to these questions. And because we do not know, we feel powerless to act, like a child confronted with some monstrous oncoming juggernaut.

When Senator Brien McMahon proposed a 50-billion-dollar foreign aid program to win Soviet adherence to international disarmament, Congress and the American people were swept by a wave of emotion.

To Secretary of State Dean Acheson fell the melancholy task of reminding them that the Kremlin responds only to superior strength; that Russia's signature to a treaty is worth no more than our power to enforce it.

It is time we faced the truth. The only realistic assumption on which policy can be based is that we are engaged in a conflict just short of declared war, that it may soon become a shooting war, and that if it does, atomic weapons probably will be used.

This is a fearful conclusion. It does not absolve us of the duty to make every effort for international controls. But it does not permit us any longer to keep our heads in the sand.

The major deterrent to atomic war is fear of retaliation, and this may not be enough. A crippling multiple air attack, because of its very destructiveness, would be an overwhelming temptation to a state that, like the Soviet Union, subordinates ethical considerations to the ends in view.

Whatever our powers of retaliation, we should still be destroyed as a nation. No threats of reprisal can hide this fact.

There is no defense against atomic attack except space. This means the dispersal of people and industries so that no single explosion, however frightful, could either paralyze a major segment of our industry, or destroy many of our people.

Only if we are dispersed will there cease to be any motive for atomic attack. Just as gunpowder made the knight and castle obsolete, the plutonium and hydrogen bombs have made the modern metropolis obsolete.

Dispersal sounds easier than it is. To take a single example: If we were to disperse our cities along ribbons of communication, so that no single blast could do serious injury, the initial outlay would be greater than the total cost of our participation in the Second World War.

This would be only the initial expenditure. The continuing cost of awkward and uneconomic location could be greater than amortization of the original outlay.

How many of our resources do we as a people want to divert to preparedness? What proportion should go to dispersal, what proportion into offensive arms? How can we achieve maximum security at the smallest cost in manpower and resources?

These questions are primarily economic. Their very magnitude explains the official paralysis in Washington. We as a people have given them almost no thought.

At Hiroshima and Nagasaki, the United States opened Pandora's box. However much we may wish to escape the consequences, we are powerless to do so. We have no choice except to consider soberly the new weapons science has unleashed, and to meet the problems they pose with calmness and good judgment. To do less is to court destruction.

City planners and economists have made specific proposals for the dispersal of urban population, and the National Security Resources Board has suggestions for the relocation of industry. In our next article we shall examine these plans for defense-in-space.

WHEN KIDNEYS Work Too Often
Are you embarrassed and bothered by too frequent elimination during the day and night? This symptom as well as burning, itching passages, Bladder Irritations, Backache, Strong Cloudy Urine, pressure over the Bladder, swollen ankles or rheumatic pains may be due to temporary germ irritation and non-organic and non-systemic Kidney and Bladder troubles. In such cases the very first dose of CYSTEX usually goes to work right now helping you these three ways: 1. Helps nature remove certain irritating non-specific germs in acid conditions. 2. Thus helps relieve a frequent cause of many aches and pains. 3. By relieving and calming irritated tissues, it helps reduce frequent or smarting passages day and night. Get CYSTEX from your druggist. Give it a fair trial under satisfaction or money back guarantee.

Trivia In Congress

District day in the House of Representatives was passed by this week because of Lincoln's birthday. But the House will be asked today to consider several measures that have come out of the District Committee. One would incorporate the Girl Scouts and the other would foolishly prevent any noncitizen doctor from practicing in the District. The District Committee yesterday in a special meeting reported out five other measures. The action was designed to block the FEPC bill for this week.

Obviously it is absurd to have local ordinances thrown into the national legislative mill in this fashion. It is even more absurd to have the National Legislature giving its attention to relatively trivial matters concerning only the District. The community is grateful to members of Congress for giving attention to its affairs while its people are disfranchised. But it also hopes that Congress will see the need for passing the home-rule bill to free itself from these local chores as well as to do justice to the residents of the Capital.

A New Look

Comment in the country at large is inclined to the opinion that the President made his H-bomb decision too lightly. Nothing, as Mr. Marquis Childs said recently, could be further from the truth. The President's brusque statement seems to have been due to a desire to bring to an end a growing public speculation based in the main upon embroidered leaks. But the President did not fail either to consult or to ponder; both he did long and earnestly. No, there can be no complaint under that head. However, the responsible leadership which is exercisable only by the Presidency is not represented merely by decision. It is represented by explanation and persuasion. "The Presidency," said Franklin D. Roosevelt, before he became President, "is preeminently a place of moral leadership. All our great Presidents were leaders of thought at times when certain historic ideas in the life of the Nation had to be clarified."

The President on this occasion left the task of explanation and persuasion to his Secretary of State. But Mr. Acheson brushed aside the H-bomb decision, and cleared the ground of illusions on Russo-Western relations. So the H-bomb was made to seem as inevitable as doom. The reaction might have been anticipated. At home it seems to be one of frustration, coupled with an uneasy feeling that bullets seem to be the only answer to the Russian conundrum. Abroad, if French comment is any guide, an agitation has arisen again that Europe must seek to neutralize western Europe in the approaching war of the Titans. Neutralization is the agitation that Averell Harriman had thought had been scotched by the Marshall Plan and the Atlantic Pact. Now it is advocated by organs close to the Foreign Office. This sinking spell in Europe produced by the knowledge of H-bombs prospectively held by both Titans is understandable. It must be reversed. And surely there is no better way of doing that than by a reexamination of the whole situation by independent men of stature in our Nation called upon to do what Mr. Churchill called "exalted brooding."

Mr. Churchill was speaking about the function of royal commissions, appointed periodically when "certain historic ideas" in British life required clarification. Now a similar idea of a permanent commission for "exalted brooding" is being discussed in England as a sort of adjunct to the Cabinet system. Why? Because departmental posts leave no time to look at a problem and look at it whole. It is the common objection to life in Washington that everybody has too many administrative duties to permit of any time at all for thinking. Yet thinking is needed as never before. This was the purpose back of the setting up of the planning branch in the State Department, but it is doubtful whether the thinking there has more to encompass than the next step, the next speech, or the next press conference. What we have in mind is "exalted brooding" by outstanding Americans freed for the time being from administrative duties. With the results of this deliberation the President could find new strength for expressing a leadership which would unite the whole country on its course and on its responsibility. It would likewise be practical politics for a world power of the towering stature of the United States. A "unifying idea" was the principle that the great Austrian Minister, Prince Metternich, sought in ending the "great panic" in Europe after the Napoleonic wars, and the world now is in the same condition and has the same need. The idea is as legitimate as the function of the Presidency.

Fighting Crime

The significant thing about the Attorney General's crime conference meeting in Washington today is the emphasis it will place on the interstate nature of certain highly organized types of crime. Some of this crime, to be sure, could be deterred by better grass-roots law enforcement. But such enforcement is hampered by political boundaries, whereas the crime syndicates do not respect State lines. No one-day conference can be expected to do much more than sketch the problem, but a considerable service will have been done if the attention of the Nation's municipal officials, attorneys general and law officers is focused on what needs to be done.

Drew Pearson, in his column yesterday, furnished a good example of how the gambling syndicates move in octopus fashion to stifle law enforcement by political means. He related how a Miami Beach, Fla., city councilman, elected on an antigambling platform, was offered bribes to close his eyes to the operation of a punchboard syndicate. Interestingly enough, the councilman was to be permitted to denounce the syndicate roundly, and provision was even to be made for mock raids. When the councilman refused, he was the immediate subject of a recall petition. This, in miniature, is what threatens many communities when gambling and allied crimes get a foothold.

One remedy which the Attorney General's conference undoubtedly will discuss is closer control of communications facilities. As pointed out by the District grand jury, access to telephone and telegraph wire service is essential to bookmaking and the numbers racket. Indeed, there is some indication that a few radio stations have been broadcasting information useful to gamblers. The problem thus is a direct concern of the Federal Communications Commission, and perhaps the conference will provide the impetus for the FCC to spell out the responsibilities of the utilities in more detail. If the telegraph company, say, were under compulsion to furnish information to local officials about suspected illegal use of its facilities, the job of gathering evidence would be a great deal easier.

For good reason, the police powers of the Federal Government have been limited—though in our opinion there should be no objection on grounds of centralization to such Federal aid as the bill to ban interstate shipment of slot machines. What the crime conference can do, in addition to charting the general area in which more Federal help may be warranted, is to point up how local and Federal law enforcement agencies can work more effectively together under existing law. The first step is to find out just how extensive the crime problem is, and in this respect the conference can advance its purpose by marshaling its influence behind the Kefauver bill for a Senate Judiciary Committee investigation of interstate gambling and racketeering. Committees set up by the crime conference then could work cooperatively with the Senate committee by reporting to it relevant facts about the networks of crime.

Mrs. Sanger's Visa

In refusing Mrs. Margaret Sanger permission to visit Japan, General MacArthur (or the Army Department) certainly did not yield to Japanese wishes. The Japanese know and respect Mrs. Sanger. And they realize that they have in extreme form the kind of problem for which she has one of the answers. She made a distinct impression on her last visit to Japan in 1937 upon some of the leading Japanese women, and has devoted followers in that country, notably Baroness Ishimoto. To be sure, the mores of Japan were against her. But since then the women in Japan have secured the vote and equal rights in other fields of activity, and without a doubt Mrs. Sanger would have had a success in the new and emancipated Japan. She has something to offer Japanese women individually as an alternative to the infanticide which they have been accustomed to practice out of sheer poverty.

Nor can the nation as a whole, or the American authorities, be indifferent to Mrs. Sanger's message. The overpopulation of Japan is an outstanding fact, and, given the present American largesse, the people are proliferating rapidly. The yearly rate of advance is 1,700,000, with the total at present standing at 80 millions. Alarmed over the population figures, General MacArthur sometime ago started a natural resources section, and to head it appointed Prof. George Ackerman of the University of Chicago. The report was "eagerly awaited," according to the correspondents. It is a grim document, judging from the excerpts, for the report does not seem to have yet been offered for circulation in America. After weighing all the factors in the equation, the authors said the Japanese can be "self-supporting" after the United States winds up its aid, but only "with internal political, social and economic distress, and a standard of living gradually approaching the bare subsistence level." The conclusion is that only a drastic control of population beyond any precedent could save the Japanese people from either acute distress or dependence upon American charity. Clearly the latter is out of the question either from the standpoint of America or from that of Japan.

General MacArthur has done well in trying to encourage better use of Japan's meager resources. But, having balked at any preachment on such ways and means of birth control as Mrs. Sanger's clinics provide, his service is one-legged, and indeed, self-defeating; and this attitude is piling up a legacy of trouble for the United States. The ban on Mrs. Sanger is crazy on policy grounds, aside from being an insult to one of the most distinguished American women of her generation.

Maritime Subsidies

When the Comptroller General reported vide, his service is one-legged, and, in-Maritime Commission ship construction subsidies, the commission relied on shipping partisans in Congress to get it out of the jam. The commission successfully ignored both the Comptroller General's recommendations and the equally damning findings of the House Executive Expenditures Committee backing the charges. It ought not to be allowed to get away with similar indifference to the Comptroller General's current report on abuses in operating subsidies—abuses which the Hardy Subcommittee of the Executive Expenditures Committee is now investigating. So many disclosures of shady practices point either to abysmal incompetence or deliberate evasion of the law by the commission majority, or both.

Specifically the Comptroller General now asserts that tax deferments have become hidden subsidies to ship operators; that the commission has misused the "trade-in" allowances provided in the 1946 Ship Sales Act to apply retroactively to ships exchanged before the act was passed; that the commission in one instance broke its own contract with an operator by absorbing charges for alterations for which the operator was liable; and that in another instance it reversed its own interpretation of the law in order to permit an operator to carry forward cumulative losses as a means of reducing charter charges.

In short, the Maritime Commission majority seems to have become an agent not of the public interest, but of the shipping interests. The question is not whether there should be an adequate merchant marine or subsidies to maintain it, or even whether the Merchant Marine Act should be amended. It is simply whether the existing law means what it says. For an administrative agency to arrogate to itself the function of changing the law is the grossest sort of impropriety—an impropriety which, in view of the President's sensible attitude toward ship subsidies, deserves his earnest attention. Reorganization alone is not the answer. The basic problem is one of personnel on the Maritime Commission. What the commission needs, and apparently does not now have, is policy-makers of courage whose first dedication is to their public trust.

Big Crime In D. C.

A great deal of light has been thrown on Washington's crime problem by the report of the 23-man grand jury which investigated gambling here in 1948 and 1949. Says the grand jury: ". . . organized gambling exists in the District of Columbia to a degree that indicates complete disregard for law and if left uncurbed constitutes a serious threat to the safety and welfare of this community. . . . Professional gambling is a breeding ground for numerous other crimes, particularly crimes of violence . . ." About the time the report was released the House District Committee's crime hearing was told that the task of coping with the city's multi-million-dollar gambling rackets is entrusted to eight policemen. To this were added statistics showing that many gamblers have been let off with $50 to $70 fines.

One has a large part of the answer to the prevalence of crime in this combination of facts. The District has done precious little to curb these crime-breeding rackets that flourish on such a large scale. Gambling cannot take hold of a community, thus putting the criminal element in the big money and encouraging defiance of the law, unless it is generally tolerated. The city has let down its guards. It is evident that the blame cannot be laid at any one door. But at least the United States attorney's office has been actively pressing its fight against some of the larger operators in recent months—a diligence that cannot be detected on the part of the police.

The grand jury has outlined several important steps that ought to be taken in any comprehensive drive against this big business in crime. (1) The gamblers can be denied the protection they now obtain from skipping back and forth across State boundary lines. (2) They can be denied use of telephone and telegraph facilities. (3) Vehicles regularly used in gambling operations can be confiscated. Restaurants, poolrooms, liquor stores, newsstands, taxicabs and other business concerns engaged in gambling can be denied licenses for abuse of their privileges.

The grand jury was especially impressed by the handicap that operations across State lines impose upon enforcement officers. Certainly that is a problem calling for congressional action. No doubt the law can also be strengthened in other respects. But when every possible loophole in the law has been closed, the city will still be plagued by crime springing out of gambling unless routine enforcement of the law is stepped up several hundred percent. The grand jury's report and the data given to the crime investigating committee suggest that the city has been trying weakly to cope with the consequences of gambling without ever going to the source of this dangerous feeder for organized crime. A complete reorientation seems to be necessary.

Baptist Policy

In his broadcast Sunday evening, Mr. Drew Pearson declared that the First Baptist Church in Washington in torn with debate over whether or not it should permit an interracial group to hold a dinner in our church, and that the matter is now being considered by our board of trustees. In reply to his broadcast, I should like to state the following facts:

1. Our church is not torn with debate over any subject, least of all the subject of interracial relations.

2. Such a question has never been brought to the attention of any session of our trustees, deacons, or any other group within our church, and, therefore, has not been discussed in any way by them.

3. Our church has established a most cooperative record in the matter ot interracial relations, having had a Negro minister preach in our pulpit; having been host to a number of interracial dinners, some of them having been served by our own church women; and having members of all races attend our regular Sunday services from time to time.

4. I cannot imagine a more harmonious and united church than ours, and this has been true of our congregation as long as I have had any knowledge of it.

5. If anyone ever declined over the telephone a request for the use of our building by any interracial group, it was done purely on his own personal initiative, and did not come as a result of any discussion or decision from any responsible group within our church.

Illusions On Russia

In their February 11 letter, four ladies of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom support Senator McMahon's proposal that we discontinue arming and use the 50 billion dollars for "a moral crusade for peace." They believe the decision to build the hydrogen bomb untimely and dangerous and have noted the admission by those who approve building it that it provides no security. They believe in an effective control of atomic energy, but object to the Baruch plan. They indorse Senator Tydings' proposal to disarm down to rifles, and regret that the Administration seems to have lost faith in the effectiveness of international cooperation by its failure to present any bold proposals for discussion with the Russians.

In my opinion these ladies are identifying their levels of abstraction. They think of "peace" and "freedom" not as the high generalizations which they are, meaning many things to many people, but as something concrete on whose meaning it is possible to reach a consensus. When we see what Russia calls "democracy" and how it differs from what we call "democracy," how can we ever hope, by diplomatic and peaceful approach, to arrive at any mutual understanding of what is meant by "peace"?

The empirical facts on the process level in this case are these: After VJ-Day this country demobilized; it claimed no territory and no loot; it has devoted billions in order to rehabilitate a torn and bleeding world. After VJ-Day Russia did not demobilize; she proceeded to gobble up country after country on her borders on the plea that she must have "friendly neighbors." She took billions of dollars in loot from these countries; she has not given a "kopek" for rehabilitation anywhere. You can see that our ideas of "peace" and Russia's ideas of "peace" are quite different.

Before I can indorse any bold proposals for "peace" with the Russians I want to know what brand of "peace" is sought and what kind of "freedom" we are after.

REALIST.

"Central High School"

I write to thank you for your February 6 editorial, "Central High School," and to say that your constant and perpetual adherence to that which is right and honorable in your editorial columns makes The Post a benediction to the life of the community. You so well say, "The basic argument is simply effective utilization of available space. Cardozo, ancient Negro high school, is impossibly overcrowded and is operating on three shifts. The problem is immediate."

With more than 6000 empty seats in the seven white high schools, including 1000 empty seats at Central High School (after housing 500 junior high school pupils at Central), the problem of the Board of Education "is simply effective utilization of available space." The Board of Education of the District of Columbia is the most representative and democratic agency of the local government, but it needs much undergirding now when citizens who should know better are attempting to usher in the day of government by uproar as the board considers this matter which is justiciable on its merits.

Telephone Wages

I am writing to you to help clear up a very misleading advertisement the telephone company has been publishing in your paper since it started bargaining with the telephone workers' union. The ad gave salaries of their "hired help," and as an operator I come about $5 short of what the advertisement claims I should be making a week. In order to even come within $5 of the "terrific amount," I have to work in the evenings until 11:30.

Also, our progressive raises that the telephone company talks about, are given to us in such a manner that it takes eight years to get the maximum salary which is still under the maximum salary that the telephone company is advertising.

Emergency President

Now that the hydrogen bomb is being developed and similar weapons of total destruction may be in process of development in other countries, it may be pertinent to give some thought to the advisability of the extension of the orderly succession to the Presidency in the event that Washington should some day become one of the first targets in the United States.

In order to protect the executive branch of the national Government from any confusion which could develop under such circumstances, it would seem appropriate to extend the succession to the Governors of the States, starting with the most populous State of New York and continuing with the Governors of Pennsylvania, Illinois, Californit, Ohio, etc., according to the population as compiled in the last U. S. census.

This may be a good time for a member of Congress to introduce suitable legislation for this purpose.

Wisdom On The H-Bomb

Messrs. Truman and Acheson must have found it very difficult to have reacted as calmly and controlled to Senator Tydings' appeal for disarmament as they did.

If this had been merely the publicity stunt of a politician whose term is about to expire, nothing more need be said. But the Senator from Maryland's position on the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy puts him in a class where such irresponsible antics should not be tolerated. There are times and places where woolly-headedness will do as much harm as the outright treason of a Dr. Fuchs.

How many more nations does Stalin have to conquer, how many more treaties and agreements does he have to break, how many more divisions, submarines and airplanes does he have to add to his growing might, and how many more human beings does he have to imprison, torture and butcher before Senator Tydings will realize the meaning of the danger that threatens to engulf us all?

W. K.

Woodacres, Md.

Dean Acheson's "peace through strength" formula is such an historical absurdity that it can gain supporters only from the blind and the intellectually bankrupt.

"This is," says Mr. Acheson, "no time for self-recriminations." Can we then turn on or off our self-recriminations at will, like, say, turning on or off a spigot? And can any American of humane persuasion be conscience-clear, when by nationality and generation he is so closely identified with the two most heinous and reprehensible acts of inhumanity in the annals of mankind? I am talking about the two atom bombs that were dropped on cities that were full of people.

Our reason? To save the lives of American soldiers . . . to shorten the war. "Peace through strength!" We stopped a war, we saved the lives of American soldiers, and . . . we established a precedent.

Strength is relative. In the approaching cataclysm, there will be two great nations who will be doing all in their respective power to shorten the war and thus save the lives of the precious nationals. From what I have read in the newspapers and the science columns, there never has before ever been such a war-shortener as the hydrogen bomb. Peace through strength.

A. E. BASSETT.
Charlotte, N. C.

Since the President is cool to your suggestion of a "kitchen cabinet" and the pooling of information to the public information from men whose authority we have learned to trust, could you not take the initiative by interviewing and publishing the opinions of these men? Conduct a public forum via the pages of your newspaper, a town meeting in print, which would be in keeping with our democratic principles. Should there be a question of disclosure of secret information, such material could first be cleared through the GBI.

As a mother, I am concerned with giving the youth of our country at least a 50-50 chance of the future, with the same liberty and opportunity their parents inherited from brave, far-seeing ancestors. We need all the light of the best minds of our country.

Sex Equity In Retirement

By Malvina Lindsay

Chivalry Yields

CHIVALRY has taken a couple of economic blows lately, one in the liberalized social security bill, another in the ruling by the United States Court of Claims that women must pay taxes on money received as alimony or for separate maintenance.

Best evidence of the quiet revolution taking place in relation of the sexes is afforded in the social security bill. As passed by the House this bill sets age of retirement for both women and men at 65. Its framers discarded recommendations that women's retirement age be set at 60. No gallant crusade has yet been made in the Senate hearings to give women the extra five years of pensions.

In fact one large organization of women, the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, went on record against this. The group even urged that husbands not on social security rolls be entitled to some benefits when their working wives retired.

Thus has another blow—this time from the market place—been dealt to the romantic, long-cherished picture of woman as a frail reed, man as a strong oak. Medical science had paved the way for this by showing that woman was tougher fibred than man from cradle to grave in resistance to mortality. Census figures showed her longer lived. The next census, it is predicted from samplings, will show at least one million more women than men in the population, most of the excess being in the higher-age brackets.

HOWEVER, it was not chivalry alone that prompted the idea to have women get pensions at 60. This would have been one means of easing them out of a crowded labor market. Also among working couples such a plan would have had a practical value. Husbands generally being older than wives, it would bring retirement of both nearer the same time and enable them to start together a new phase of their lives.

On the other hand, those who oppose pensions and retirement for women at 60 are not merely being sportsmanlike. A large proportion of the able-bodied, employed women of 60 or past are widowed, divorced or single. If the retirement age for women were lowered there might be pressure on these women to retire earlier.

Anyway, as Miss Olive Huston, executive director of the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, told the Senate Finance Committee, people are living longer and should be expected to work longer and build up more of a reserve in the insurance fund.

There is the heart of the pension question—more production by the able-bodied elderly, both women and men. Yet strangely in all the furor over pensions we hear almost nothing of efforts by industry, unions, Government to keep the elderly and middle-aged productively employed.

AS ONE who has long been harping on this aspect of pensions, this writer is gratified to find it emphasized by Peter Drucker, an authority on our new industrial society, in "The Mirage of Pensions" in the current Harper's magazine.

Mr. Drucker believes that "older people will increasingly resist retirement"—that is, those able to work. He predicts that a generation hence we will be unable economically and politically to provide "adequate" retirement pensions for people over 65. While "adequate" pensions will be necessary for those physically and mentally unable to produce, yet the emphasis in our policy, he believes, should be on "finding work the older people can do—work in which they can be both productive and happy."

He suggests that industry, in cooperation with unions, work out means of rating jobs according to the physical and mental strain they impose, and older workers be put in jobs they are capable of performing. He admits this would apply chiefly to rank and file jobs. Executives would need to retire to make way for younger men, and obviously they could not be successfully demoted. Yet ways should be found of using their talents and experience, possibly in educational fields.

The pension in any future planning, Mr. Drucker insists, should be regarded as the roof of the house rather than its foundation. Certainly the need for this new emphasis comes to the fore as candidates for political office announce their platforms. Bigger and better pensions for everybody threaten to become as politically popular as the reduction of taxes—though how the two can be handled by a candidate in the same speech no one has figured out.

School Complaints

I am getting tired of hearing this younger generation complain of the schools. When I went to Central High School we had no swimming pool, no lockers—hung our coats and hats on hooks in a common coat room. But I think that the graduates of the Class of 1912 will stack up with any of those who are complaining of the hardships of crowding, having to share a locker, and having no swimming pool. Also, we had no athletic field, only a vacant lot surrounded by elementary schools. In fact, the shoe was on the other foot—Armstrong had a swimming pool and an athletic field, but we didn't whine like a bunch of spoiled brats.

Matter Of Fact

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

Mr. Johnson's Untruths

LOUIS A. JOHNSON has persistently claimed "efficiency" as the sole source of his defense savings, whereas these savings have been mainly achieved by ruthless cuts in America's armed strength. This sort of confidence trick is bad enough. It is much worse, however, that the Secretary of Defense should actively and persistently seek to create the illusion of national security where there is growing danger.

This Johnson has also done, in the most blatant manner. The bombastic climax was reached a few days ago when he declared he was giving the country a "defense establishment sufficient to deter" any aggressor, and to "lick hell out of" all aggressors that did not "stay deterred."

"Joe Stalin," said Johnson, "will know if he starts something at 4 a. m. the fighting power of the United States will be on the job at 5 a. m."

A flatly contrary picture was presented only the day before by Johnson's own Secretary of the Air Force, W. Stuart Symington, who courageously warned that the Soviet Union had already achieved greater strength than the United States in every military arm. In truth, the growth of Soviet military power is one of the great central facts in the world strategic situation that Johnson so grossly misrepresents.

SOVIET atomic bomb production, to begin at the beginning, is officially estimated at six bombs the first year and 25 bombs per year thereafter. This will give the Kremlin a stockpile of over 50 atomic bombs by the end of 1952. Although weak in comparison to ours, the Soviet strategic air force which must deliver these bombs is now composed of at least 350 B-29 type planes. Production has reached the respectable figure of 15 new heavy bombers monthly.

In every other class of air power, the Soviet strength vastly exceeds ours, or will shortly do so. The Red air force includes, for example, no less than 7500 fighters, and is obtaining the most modern jet types at the rate of 1800 annually.

Again, Red air units for support of ground forces include another 7500 aircraft, and production of these types has reached the figure of 1000 annually. This contrasts with our own pitiful weakness in this category. Over all, while the American air force of 13,000 planes is being rendered obsolescent by low replacement rates imposed by Johnson, the Kremlin possesses an air force of 19,000 aircraft being constantly improved by high production of good types.

The power of the Red Army is hardly worth pointing out; it should be mentioned, however, that Soviet heavy tank production has passed 1500 per year, whereas we do not yet possess a heavy tank. The submarine force that is the backbone of the Red fleet now numbers 270 undersea craft, according to Admiral Sherman. This means that the Kremlin now has in commission 130 more submarines than we have destroyers; and the Soviet submarine strength is continuously growing.

FORTUNATELY, there are still large gaps in the Soviet armament program. Production of the appallingly effective German Mark 21 submarine remains very low, and the Soviet air warning net, although being improved, is still extremely deficient. For a while yet, our own strength, and particularly our strategic air power and atomic stockpile, will continue to serve as a fairly reliable deterrent. The real trouble is that our deterrent power is being daily enfeebled by the combined effects of Soviet rearmament and American disarmament.

Johnson's so-called "economies" have in fact already begun to impair our military capabilities in two absolutely vital ways. Our Navy must guard both the Atlantic and Pacific sea lanes. Admiral Sherman has chosen to reassure us about the Navy's present capability to do this job, although many of his staff would sharply disagree with him. In the future, it is expected that our fleet in being will gradually become insufficient, even to prevent what is euphemistically called "temporary interruption" of the all important Atlantic sea lanes.

The divergence of Soviet and American strength will also imperil the sea lanes to Japan and Okinawa. These are long lines of communications needing many ships to guard them. It is authoritatively although privately admitted that it might be many months after the outbreak of war before the needed ships were recommissioned and at sea. By that time, of course, the garrisons in Japan and Okinawa would very probably have suffered the fate of the garrison at Bataan.

Nor is this danger to the sea lanes to be averted by the 78 million dollars belatedly added to the budget for antisubmarine equipment. The Soviet submarine force is growing. What will count in war is our force at sea of destroyers, destroyer escorts and carriers. That force has been and is being reduced.

IN THE AIR, the prospects are equally dark. The B-36 represents a sacrifice of speed and other characteristics to intercontinental range. It is increasingly doubtful whether B-36s can penetrate the mature Soviet air defense that will confront us in two or three years.

Meanwhile, the majority of our strategic air groups are to be reequipped with the excellent B-47 jet-bomber. But because of their range, the B-47s will need forward bases, particularly along the North African coast of the Mediterranean. The cuts in our carrier force have already sacrificed the capability of holding in the Mediterranean.

In his annual report, Johnson has grandiloquently promised a Navy prepared "to control vital ocean areas (and to) clear the sea lanes," and an air force "capable of carrying out its primary mission of strategic air warfare anywhere in the world." Behind the facade of misrepresentation, he is giving us the opposite. Furthermore, these progressive sacrifices of American military power, that Johnson is making yet trying to conceal, can be shown to be open invitations to defeat in future war.

Dining Democrats

By Marquis Childs

How To Raise Money—$100 A Plate

IN CITIES and towns around the country the Democrats are sitting down in hotel ballrooms to dine on chicken and green peas for which they have paid generously in order to swell the party's treasury. This far-flung operation dinner is intended to finance the congressional campaign in the fall.

Childs

The amount of money being raised is truly impressive. The climax is here in Washington where 5200 persons are paying $100 each for a dinner to be served in the National Guard Armory. They also will get a speech by President Truman for their $100.

At a dinner in Boston a few days ago 1600 diners paid $50 each and many were turned away. The attraction there was Vice President Barkley and Mrs. Barkley. The Barkleys have become the star team on the Democratic circuit and they are turning down at least 10 engagements for 1 that they fill. As one ardent Democrat put it:

"The Republicans had to bring in Fred Waring, but we've got the Barkleys."

At a dinner in Los Angeles 2000 guests paid $50 each and 1000 sent in their money too late for a place. The speaker was Secretary of the Interior Oscar Chapman, who is also in demand in various parts of the country.

IN SMALLER communities, too, the money is rolling in. In West Palm Beach, Fla., 600 diners paid $25 a plate. In some communities a minimum price is set, with checks accepted in any amount above the minimum. Thus, in Minneapolis 1000 tickets are being sold for a dinner on Saturday at a $15 minimum.

New York set the pace in mid-December by selling 3200 tickets to a dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria at which 2800 sat down. Wealthy contributors often buy tickets and then do not bother to go.

The money is customarily divided between the local Democratic organization and the national committee. If the local organization is prosperous, then most of the money is sent Washington. In the South where the organization has remained loyal to Truman, the custom is to send all the proceeds to the committee after expenses have been deducted.

The Democrats strike a pose of noble self-righteousness about this method of money-raising. They like to contrast it with the Republicans who, say the Democrats, are subsidized by large checks from the fat cats. But we, and the tone is one of piety, must get our contributions from the little fellows.

This has a smattering of truth but only a smattering. The success of the dinners is a demonstration of the power of a party long entrenched in office. It would be interesting to know how many of the diners are officeholders or the relatives of officeholders. Another category is that of prospective officeholder who turns in his offering in the hope of being rewarded with a job.

BUT A more important classification is that of favor-taker and favor-seekers. Diners in this class would include contractors with big Government contracts. It also would include large corporations with major decisions to come out of Government. The front man for the corporation buys 20 seats in his own name, making sure the right people in the party and in Government know where that $2000 came from.

Then, too, since the victory of November, 1948, the Democrats have begun to receive direct contributions from businessmen. These have come in some instances from vice presidents of firms in which the president or chairman of the board gives a larger contribution to the Republicans. There are large interests—a kind of new Wall Street—benefiting from the Truman defense program and from other aspects of Government spending.

The Republican line is to talk poor and stress the box supper. It is to play up the $100-a-plate dinners of the Democrats. In at least one State, New Jersey, the Republicans followed the dinner technique, the GOP diners turning over to National Chairman Guy George Gabrielson a check for $48,000.

The Republicans are going to have to raise a lot of money somehow. They have set a congressional campaign budget of $1,900,000. They now have ably staffed Senate and House campaign committees in addition to the national committee. That sort of thing calls for hard cash to meet payrolls and other expenses.

The recent GOP policy statement was tailored to the sensitivities and the prejudices of the party's big contributors. If it doesn't please and the checks fail to come in, then the Republicans will have to look for another technique. They, too, may be driven to the kind of mass dining that is so profitable to the Democrats.

Patricia Anne Carey Spends Quiet Day

Patricia Anne Carey spent another quiet day yesterday following her active weekend.

Mrs. James B. Carey, mother of the 8-year-old girl injured in a traffic accident January 5, said the child expends so much of her slight energy on her active days that a period of rest is needed before she again arouses herself.

Christoffel Defense Loses Major Point

By The Associated Press

The defense in Harold Christoffel's second perjury trial yesterday lost a major point—and then ran out of witnesses.

These developments came before Federal District Court Judge K. Dickinson Letts recessed the trial until this morning:

1. Judge Letts ended a week-long deadlock between the House and court over evidence desired by O. John Rogge of defense counsel by accepting action taken by the House, despite objections by Rogge.

2. Hugh Swofford, a former reporter for the Milwaukee Sentinel, testified as a defense witness that he had found nothing in labor union records he was investigating that would indicate Christoffel was a Communist.

3. It was disclosed that another witness sought by the defense, Mrs. Roy J. Israell of Washington, had left by plane last Thursday for California before she could be served with a subpena to order her to court.

Christoffel, a former president of Local 248 UAW-CIO at the Allis-Chalmers Co. plant in Milwaukee, is charged with falsely telling the House Labor Committee March 1, 1947, he had never been a Communist.

Civil Defense Developing For D. C. Area

The consequences of another war became less abstract for District residents yesterday as the Commissioners set the wheels moving for a civil defense program for Washington.

They adopted a civil defense program memorandum from Lieut. T. J. Hayes, Assistant Engineer Commissioner, as the basis for the city's civil defense planning.

It was announced that the Commissioners will ask Congress for a $30,000 deficiency appropriation to pay the salaries and office expenses of a fulltime director for the program and his office staff.

Charles Stofberg, special assistant to Commissioner John Russell Young, said that pending the appointment of a fulltime director, a District official may be named in a temporary capacity to get the program under way.

The Hayes memorandum listed 24 fields of action (such as rescue operations, fire protection, police service, unexploded bomb reconnaissance, etc.) in which there must be detailed planning.

Brig. Gen. Gordon R. Young, Engineer Commissioner, described this as just a "partial" list. Even so, he said, not all of the 24 can be started at once.

It was also announced yesterday that the NSRB has invited the Commissioners to nominate candidates for two series of training courses in the techniques of dealing with the effects of atomic attacks.

D. C. Presbyterian Membership Goes Up to 21,012

Membership in Greater Washington's 42 Presbyterian Churches increased 767 to a total of 21,012 during 1949, it was reported yesterday.

At a meeting of the Presbytery of Washington City at Georgetown Presbyterian Church, 31st and P sts. nw., Dr. Ralph K. Merker, stated clerk, also reported that Sunday school enrollment increased 691 over the 1948 total for a total of 11,762.

Building for Air Center To Start by July 1

Construction of a $200,000 aircraft detection control center by the District National Guard on the reservation of the National Training School for Boys will get under way by July 1, Guard officials said yesterday.

Funds for the project have been allocated by the National Guard Bureau, Brig. Gen. William H. Abendroth, District Guard commander, said.

General Abendroth said the Justice Department has agreed verbally to make available a 400-foot-square plot on the school reservation. Site will be on the reservation's south side, near Bladensburg rd. and South Dakota ave. ne.

Opposition Grows to State's Capitol Press Galleries Bid

The State Department request for congressional press gallery privileges for representatives of its foreign information service yesterday ran into growing opposition:

1. B. M. McKelway, editor of the Washington Evening Star and president of the American Society of Newspaper Editors, said the society wanted to be heard in opposition to the request.

2. Senator Harry Flood Byrd (D., Va.), who owns two Virginia dailies, told the Senate admission of State Department representatives to the galleries would lead to a flood of requests from other Government agencies and endanger the principle of a "free press."

3. Harold Russell, national commander of Amvets, opposed admission of State Department representatives and also called for "immediate and summary" revocation of gallery privileges held by Tass, Soviet News Agency, and the New York Daily Worker, Communist Party organ.

The standing committee of correspondents, composed of working newsmen who pass on gallery applications, meanwhile has postponed until next month hearings on the State Department's bid originally scheduled for tonight. The postponement was at the request of the State Department.

McKelway wrote the committee he has been instructed by unanimous vote of the board of directors of the American Society of Newspaper Editors "to request an opportunity, if a hearing is later to be held, to place the society on record as opposing the request."

"The society board feels that an issue has been presented which involves an important principle," McKelway said in his letter. "The ramifications of the State Department's proposal should be fully explored and understood before anything is done which might place that principle in jeopardy."

Senator Byrd, meanwhile, urged the committee to "firmly reject" any further bid by the State Department "or any other agency of the Government or any private organization not directly engaged in the dissemination of news in the

Amvets National Commander Russell wrote the committee that "any infiltration by Government into the realm of the free press in whatever guise is an entering wedge that must be regarded as a threat to our cherished constitutional guarantees."

Urging withdrawal of gallery privileges long extended Tass and Daily Worker representatives, Russell said:

"It is outrageous that these pipelines to the Kremlin should be shown preferential treatment in coverage of news often vitally affecting our defense and our security."

City Bank Nets $9.72 a Share, Sets New Peak

By S. Oliver Goodman

Net income of The City Bank in 1949 rose to a new peak of $243,413 or $9.72 a share after taxes, President C. F. Burton reported. This compared with $236,000 or $9.44 a share in the previous year.

C. F. Burton

The net for 1949 included a non-recurring profit of $4769 on bonds.

Deposits at yearend totaled $29,964,850, a gain of about $1,300,000. Burton attributed this rise to opening of the new Benning rd. branch during the year.

After special charge-offs and reserves and after dividends, the bank added $95,005 to undivided profits.

Portfolio of Government securities at yearend totaled $12,671,781, a gain of about 1½ million. Loans and discounts aggregated $12,702,552, up $1,600,000.

The institution, whose main office is at 9th st. and Massachusetts ave. nw., operates seven branches. Last March, a new branch building was opened at 919 Pennsylvania ave. nw., replacing rented quarters nearby.

SLIGHT DROP: District of Columbia holdings of United States Steel Corp. common stock totaled 203,085 shares as of December 31, compared with 212,520 shares six months before, the corporation reported yesterday. A drop also was noted in preferred holdings which stood at 40,209 shares at the end of 1949, against 41,367 for the preceding June 30. Geographical ownership is based upon stockholders' addresses appearing on the corporation's records.

WHO'S WHO TODAY: John Wesley Hanes, former Undersecretary of the Treasury, has been elected a vice president and director of Olin Industries, Inc. Saul Greber has resigned from Southern Wholesalers to join his brothers in the Greber Distributing Co. . . . Lawrence Wiesinger, son of the maitre d' of the Mayflower, has joined the hotel's staff . . . Amos Culbert has been appointed to head Northwest Airline's traffic department . . . James B. Miller has been named Washington district sales manager for United Air Lines, succeeding Clyde Doran who has been assigned to a similar post in Chicago.

Truman's 7-Day Coal Board Makes Mockery of T-H Act

By J. A. Livingston

YOU'VE got to hand it to President Truman. Even when he invokes the Taft-Hartley Act, he makes a mockery of it. His request to a three-man Fact-Finding Board to report on the coal dispute in seven days is absurd on the face of it. No board, no matter how conversant with the issues to begin with, could do an adequate job in that time.

What's more, public opinion would be skeptical of such short-order findings. Thoughtful men want to be sure all the issues and avenues of a dispute have been explored, even if it means reviewing old facts and furies. Not only that, but a seven-day board isn't able to make a public impact. It's deprived of the rat-a-tat-tat of headlines.

Livingston

In the recent dispute in steel, the three-man Fact-Finding Board took 57 days. Presidents of the leading steel companies made statements, which got space in the newspapers. Similarly, Philip Murray, head of the United Steelworkers, and others appeared for the union. And again, newspapers carried the news. Finally, the report itself was an impressive document—80 pages of Government-printing-office type—about 40,000 words. Again headlines and public impact.

The coal report, on the other hand, was less than 3500 words and foreordained.

BY GOING outside the Taft-Hartley law, President Truman was able to get Philip Murray, president of the United Steelworkers, voluntarily to postpone the strike pending hearings and a report. When he asked Lewis to do likewise in coal, Lewis replied: "The mine workers do not wish three strangers, however well-intentioned but necessarily ill-informed, to fix their wages, decree their working conditions, define their living standards, and limit the educational opportunities of their children."

So, on February 6, the President appointed a Taft-Hartley Fact-Finding Board. By then, coal stocks were down to less than a three weeks' supply. There was an obvious national emergency. The board merely rubber-stamped the emergency on February 11. By that time coal stocks were down to 16 days.

The President's deadline was so short as to move the board to say: "Because of close time limitations, our work was carried on under a good deal of pressure." Yet Truman could have appointed a board earlier. The act says: "Whenever in the opinion of the President, a threatened or actual strike or lockout . . . will imperil the national health or safety, he may appoint a board of inquiry to inquire into the issues involved in the dispute and to make a written report to him within such time as he shall prescribe."

THE TAFT-HARTLEY ACT forbids boards of inquiry making recommendations. But the act affords plenty of scope, saying that "a report shall include a statement of the facts with respect to the dispute including each party's statement of its position." Given enough time, a resourceful board could array the facts so that the public itself could determine the merits and demerits of the dispute.

The present report proves its own inadequacy. The board says that if the operators and Lewis could come to terms on wages, all other issues, including the notorious "able and willing" clause, could have been "negotiated." Yet the board did not go into the underlying reasons why the operators insisted they could not raise wages or increase welfare royalties. And that's really what the public has need to know. Did they argue that they'd lose business to competing fuels? Or that their financial position would be endangered? Or that they were unwilling to grant Lewis more this year than was granted in autos, in steel?

EQUALLY, the board was unable, in the time alloted, to go into why Lewis had to have higher wages. Lewis knows that coal is a declining industry. He knows that he and the operators face a common problem, overproduction. He knows that his miners face lean years ahead. So, is he trying, through a wage boost, to get a living wage on a three-day week, which is about all the industry can afford at current rates of consumption?

We know no more about the coal dispute than we did before the board made its report. And the whole proceeding leaves a bad taste in everybody's mouth. The coal miners naturally dislike being pushed around by a seven-day board. The coal operators (and other businessmen) can hardly trust such an impetuous finding. Some day in some way they, in turn, may be the victims. The President, himself, by originally suggesting a 60-day fact-finding board for coal, implied the weakness of his own ultimate procedure.

Virginia Kills Bill to Create Court Officer

Richmond, Va., Feb. 14 (AP).—The Senate finance committee dealt a quick death blow today to a bill aimed at speeding up the administration of justice in the courts of the State.

It killed by a vote of 12 to 6 the judicial council measure creating an administrative officer of the courts. The bill had the indorsement of the State Supreme Court of Appeals, the Governor and a large segment of the Virginia Bar.

The finance committee reported by a 17-to-1 vote, however, a companion measure setting up a judicial conference of Virginia as an arm of the judiciary.

Second Phase of School Bill

Action also saw introduction in the Senate of the second of Governor Battle's plans for aiding localities in financing school construction.

This was the bill calling for transfer of 11 million dollars from excess sinking fund reserves to the State literary fund—the source from which localities normally borrow for school construction. It is a measure complementing the Governor's principal school aid—the 45 million dollars in outright grants which already has become law.

New Charter Is Adopted in Alexandria

Alexandria City Council last night unanimously adopted a new charter for the city and sent it to the Virginia General Assembly for approval.

Principal provision adopted by the council, which last night wound up numerous closed sessions on charter proposals, calls for a referendum June 13 on whether the city collector and city attorney should be elected or appointed.

As submitted by the charter revision commission, the charter provided both offices should be appointive instead of elective. In addition, the city collector was to be placed under control of the new Department of Finance set up in the charter.

Hottest moment of an otherwise quiet meeting came when Councilman Leroy S. Bendheim strongly opposed a section which permits the council to eject a council member if deemed unfit.

Bendheim's motion to delete the entire section was defeated by a 4-to-3 vote. Council did delete these two items, however:

A provision that no city employe shall continue working for Alexandria after becoming a candidate for public office, and electioneering or solicitation of political support during regular working hours be prohibited.

In approving the charter, council gave State Senator Andrew W. Clarke and Delegate Armistead L. Boothe power to make any modifications they think necessary to gain passage.

The charter provided that no councilman may interfere in the hiring or firing of a city employe. Should this occur, the council member is guilty of a misdemeanor and may be ousted.

Last night, however, council agreed this did not prohibit a councilman from "discussing" hiring or firing of city employes.

Sailor Sues His Officers From Jail

The campaign against supersalty language in the Navy may be all right, but William Earl Babbitt, an apprentice seaman, figures that in his case the "brass hats" went too far.

Babbitt, now in Norfolk, Va., filed suit yesterday in District Court for $50,000 against an admiral and five other officers on the grounds that he was given more than the maximum sentence for using "abusive, obscene and disrespectful" language toward a Marine shore patrol on 11th st. se.

Babbitt said in the suit, filed through Attorney Fred W. Shields, that he received a four-month sentence and a bad-conduct discharge out of the courtmartial which convicted him of the charge. It is contended by Babbitt that three months was the maximum penalty.

The suit charges false imprisonment and is filed against Rear Adm. G. B. Davis, who convened the court-martial, and against the five court members.

Babbitt, according to the action, was charged formally with conduct prejudicial to the good order and discipline of the service, and that the only specification on which he was convicted was the language charge.

CYO Votes Expansion Of Program

Because of the success it has enjoyed in its two years of operation, the Catholic Youth Organization of the Washington Archdiocese last night voted to expand its activities.

To finance the larger program, the CYO will seek $25,000 in a campaign from April 10 to May 6, President Leo C. Rover announced.

Plans for the campaign were outlined for more than 200 CYO officers, board members, and parish directors at the Hotel Mayflower. Raymond A. DuFour, second vice president of the CYO, will direct the campaign.

Last year more than 4000 youngsters participated in the spiritual, cultural, social and athletic activities of the CYO.

BUICK STYLE IS HERE AGAIN!

No question now as to who has the ball on automobile styling!

Take a look at almost any blockful of new cars—and you will see once more the sweep and dip of tapering fenders that Buick pioneered — and that the whole country went for with a joyous whoop and holler.

They're a little smoother now, of course, rounded a bit — and are molded right into the body. And they flow sweetly into rear-fender forms that look for all the world like a jet plane's power plant.

Then look how wonderfully they are topped off in the upperstructure—with wide, curving, one-piece windshields, and with smart, Buick-originated wrap-around back windows!

Yes, Buick style is here again. The sleek, swift-lined style that has put Buick right in the fashion forefront of postwar America.

And you can have it in a choice of many sleek and roomy models, ranging in price from just above the lowest brackets to the fine-car field.

Come in to see your Buick dealer — and start traveling in the smartest styling of the times.

Liberal London Newspaperman Figures Tories Will Win, But His Paper Talks of Close Race

By Frank Gervasi
Post Reporter

London.—An old friend, a Fleet st. notable justly famous for his courage in battle and his steady hand with the bottle, fanned my ear for an hour the other day with the details of why the Conservatives would run the legs off the Laborites in the current race to determine who next shall govern Britain.

My friend, who for obvious reasons must remain anonymous, produced facts, figures, analyses, polls, charts and diagrams to prove his contention. His story was written and in type. He patted the folded galleys in his pocket. His paper was running the piece the next day.

The man in question, one of British journalism's foremost pundits, as well known in this country as Drew Pearson is in America, is personally a Liberal with faintly pinkish nuances in his political make-up. He is the kind of Briton who might vote Labor when the chips are down if he did not like his own party's candidate, but would not vote Tory.

Conservative Leanings

His newspaper, on the other hand, is nominally independent but with well-known Conservative leanings. It is certainly anti-Labor, as is the bulk of the British press, and would eagerly print a pro-Tory piece if the facts added up that way in forecasting the election.

It was doubly news, therefore, that (1) my Liberal friend had come to Tory conclusions and that (2) the independent newspaper would print them. I waited eagerly for the first edition.

The story as printed contained little of my friend's warm logic about a Conservative victory. It merely spoke of a "close race" with the possibility of a "photo-finish." Much, apparently, had happened 'twixt typewriter and printing press.

The newspaper's watered-down version of the pundit's column was undoubtedly due to widespread realization that much may happen between now and February 23 to sway the great Middle Mind of the British electorate one way or the other. Nobody, either in Fleet st. or in the smallest wards of the country constituencies is publicly calling this one yet.

Standard Predicts Tory Victory

So far, only the Evening Standard, of the great London journals, has stuck its neck out with a prediction: "Tories Given to Win by 44." It was based on a survey of correspondents throughout the nation, but the article under the prediction was as full of hedges as the English countryside and played down the fact that the reporters themselves believed the Socialists would win, overwhelmingly.

By and large, however, British newspapermen are inhibited by the sad experiences of their American colleagues in the forecasting debacle of '48, and when predictions appear they are as anonymous as the staff correspondents of the London Times.

"A lot of us over 'ere burned our fingers on that one, too," confessed a sad-eyed Fleet Streeter in a candidly cockney moment. "We 'ave no desire to compound the croime, as it were."

"Besides, chum," put in another who since a year ago last November has been writing gardening news instead of politics, "we don't trust the polls any more, even when they're roight!"

Polls Favor Laborites

The polls have been showing the Laborites leading the Tories in the race and going away by a nose. The Liberals are out of the money but are still in a position to foul either or both of the main contenders.

With the race half run, two elements, more than built-in British reticence or understandable inhibitions induced by having guessed wrong before, account for the general Fleet st. quiet on the matter of who will win February 23.

These are: the presence of unexpected numbers of Liberals on the hustings to contest the Parliamentary seats of Tories and Laborites and a little matter of "redistributions." Of the two, the latter is the more important by far.

Britain's political divisions, the constituencies, were recently reshaped and the Parliamentary seats redistributed. Labor has automatically lost a number of seats in the process and Labor and Tory areas have been reshuffled. No one yet knows what the effect is likely to be on the outcome.

Heads Strong and Tales Tall on Eastern Shore . . .

By Hal Boyle

Cambridge, Md., Feb. 14 (AP).—You never heard of rats that raise kittens? Or foxes chasing dogs? Or about the fellow who's been breaking bricks over his head for 30 years?

Well, come to Maryland's Eastern Shore. They've got 'em all here—plus golden-fried chicken, beaten biscuits, oysters, and whistling swans in the Choptank River.

It is one of the most colorful regions in America, where descendants of the men who beat the Pilgrims across still live close to the sea and soil, and earn their bread from each.

"The Choptank Indians—Choptank means Blue Water—used to be here, too," said Emmett Andrews. "But they pulled up the bones of their ancestors and moved away."

Full of Lore

Andrews, a former high school principal, knows lore about wild life and gusty people you don't find in many books.

How can rats raise kittens, Mr. Andrews?

"Oh, they're muskrats, and their young are called kittens. They have several litters a year.

"The muskrat is a wonderful animal—so clean. It lives on roots in the marshes, and it washes every root before it eats it.

Fatal Weakness

"He's a very strong animal except at the tip of the nose. You can kill one with a lead pencil by hitting him across the nose."

And about foxes chasing dogs, Mr. Andrews?

"Well, the hound dogs had the foxes pretty well thinned out here. But as the farmers began keeping fewer hound dogs, the foxes came back.

"One time a few years back some foxes got tired of being annoyed by one particularly bothersome hound dog. So they just ganged up one day and turned on him and chased the hound clear back into the farmyard—so the farmer said."

And about the fellow who breaks bricks over his head, Mr. Andrews?

"Oh, you mean Charlie Willey? He started breaking bricks over his head 30 years ago as a stunt. He'd bet you a nickel he could do it—all in fun."

Hasn't this ever hurt him?

"Oh, no, not as far as anyone could tell. He's 63 and a grandfather now. Works at a sawmill."

Air-Sea Search On For 'Ditched' B-36

By the United Press

Seattle, Feb. 14 (AP).—Ablaze and coated with ice, an Air Force B-36 bomber has been forced down north of here, presumably in wind-tossed, icy Queen Charlotte Sound, with 17 men aboard.

(Lieut. Col. Daniel V. Macdonald, 843 S. Frederick st., Arlington, was aboard the plane as an "observer."

(Macdonald, 30, is a pilot, attached to the office of director of planning and operations at Air Force headquarters here.

(His wife, Ruth, anxiously awaiting news of her husband last night, said he flew B-17s in Italy and North Africa during the late war. She said they came here over a year ago from Los Angeles, where Colonel Macdonald was a student in an Air Force school. The couple have no children.)

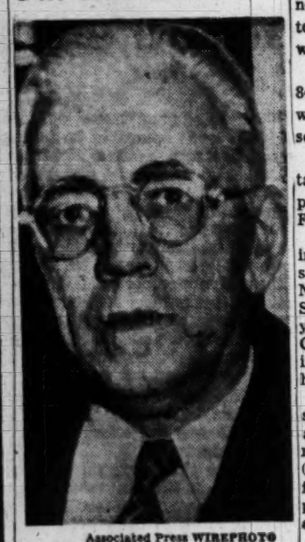
An extensive two-nation air-sea search was begun immediately after the giant six-engined plane reported about 11:40 p. m. (PST) (2:40 a. m. EST) that it was being forced to "ditch" in the waters approximately 460 miles northwest of Seattle.

Radio messages reported one engine afire, instruments were crippled and the craft was severely iced. Another report indicated three engines were disabled before the plane went down.

Messages from the crippled plane were relayed by an accompanying B-36, which reached Carswell Air Force Base at Fort Worth, Tex., this afternoon. It was "raining, icing and sleeting" when the B-36 vanished, with low visibility. The sister ship stood by for nearly an hour, trying in vain to see or to contact the disabled plane. Both B-36s were flying on instruments.

A general air of secrecy surrounded the plane after first reports were received that it was in distress. Air Force, Navy, Coast Guard and Royal Canadian Air Force planes immediately began to fan out over Queen Charlotte Sound.

Ex-Silver Shirt Out on Parole



Associated Press WIREPHOTO
WILLIAM D. PELLEY, former Silver Shirt leader convicted of wartime sedition and sentenced to 15 years in prison, was released on parole yesterday at Terre Haute, Ind., after serving seven years. He was ordered back to North Carolina to face a 15-year-old sentence for illegal sale of securities. He will be free on bond until an extradition hearing is held March 8.

A. L. Valentine Has Luck in Court on Valentine's Day

Albert L. Valentine, 29, of 1018 Howard rd., se., yesterday faced Municipal Court Judge Walter J. Casey, charged with theft of iron pipe valued at $125 from a construction site.

The case was continued last week until yesterday, with Judge Casey remarking "maybe Valentine's Day will be your lucky day."

Casey was right. The Government was unable to produce its star witness who is overseas with the Army. Charges against Valentine were dismissed.

U. S. May Keep Big Mo Going For Prestige

By the United Press

Secretary of the Navy Francis P. Matthews indicated yesterday that the battleship Missouri may be kept in service for its "prestige" value even if top Navy officers rule an aircraft carrier would be more valuable strategically.

He told reporters he expects to reach a final decision soon on the future of the 45,000-ton battleship which recently was stuck for 15 days on a mudbank in Hampton Roads, Va.

Chairman Carl Vinson (D., Ga.) of the House Armed Services Committee is sponsoring a resolution to relegate the Navy's only active battleship to the "mothball" reserve fleet, and replace it with a carrier.

Admiral Forrest P. Sherman, Chief of Naval Operations, is said to lean toward a formal recommendation along the same lines.

Fog Puts Off Sailing Of Big Mo Until Today

Norfolk, Va., Feb. 14 (AP).—The battleship Missouri is having a tough time getting to Guantanamo.

The Big Mo sailed from Norfolk January 17 for a training cruise to Cuba, but ran aground in Chesapeake Bay. They patched up her torn bottom and today she was all set to try again. But along came a heavy fog and the Navy decided it would be better to wait a bit. So the departure was postponed until 7:30 a. m. tomorrow.

The naval court of inquiry probing the grounding had delayed its usual noon luncheon recess until 2:40 p. m. to hear testimony by members of the ship's crew in time for them to sail.

As the court entered its ninth day of hearings today, the judge advocate said he expects to end his presentation of evidence tomorrow. Then the four defendants will begin presenting their evidence.

Senate to Act On Palestine DP Measure

A Senate resolution to continue the United Nations relief program for Palestine refugees was sent to the Senate floor for action yesterday.

Chairman Tom Connally (D., Tex.) filed the measure and an accompanying report, unanimously backed by his Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Yesterday's action, urged by the Holyland Emergency Liaison Program, follows U. N. General Assembly approval last December of a resolution introduced jointly by the United States, France, the United Kingdom and Turkey, providing for the continuation of the U. N. relief program for Arab refugees who have fled Israel into Jordan, Syria, Lebanon and Gaza Strip. The resolution also approves the work-relief plan recently recommended by the U. N. Economic Survey Mission for the Middle East.

Approval of the resolution by both houses of Congress would authorize the United States to contribute about $27,500,000 for relief and public works projects in the Middle East over an 18-month period beginning January 1, 1950.

In a statement yesterday, HELP said "the hardest winter in modern times has resulted in the death of many Palestine refugees, and threatens more."

These refugees, for whom help is sought, number about 800,000.

Alfred M. Lilienthal, counsel and secretary of HELP, will speak over Station WQQW Friday at 9:45 a. m. in a special appeal on behalf of the refugees.

Auerbach Returns Tonight for Feud With Caps

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

THE SIGNS ARE that the war-caused crimp in the development of skilled young ballplayers is just about at an end. The most glittering rookie crop since 1940 is moving up to American League clubs this spring for trial and measurement, and a majority of them are tabbed as can't-miss guys.

POVICH

Aloyisus Egan, the Detroit Tigers' head scout and rated the most astute man of his craft, predicted back in 1944 that 1950 would be the year when the good young ballplayers would reappear again. "We have to cancel out the war years," said Egan then, "and it will be five seasons after the war before the good ones will start filtering up through the minors again."

That they are ripening is significant in the fact that the American League has called up the largest rookie crop in several seasons—123 minor league graduates ranging from the Browns' 20 to the Nats' 13.

The war meant longer baseball careers for dozens of major leaguers who are still around in their mid-thirties for lack of kids who could crowd 'em, but this could be the last year for a slew of old-timers. Young America is catching up with 'em, it seems.

VIRTUALLY every team in the league boasts at least a pair of rookies who are threatening to crowd into regular jobs. The Nats may be the exception, with only Outfielder Irv Noren deemed ready to step into a permanent berth. Pitcher Fred Nagy could qualify, on his remarkable 2.65 earned run average in the Coast League, but Nagy is 29, with two big league trials behind him, and age-wise is not a rookie.

Noren, though, is one of the bright young prospects, perhaps the brightest of the crop. Not only does he have that .330 batting average in the Coast League going for him, but in successive years he was voted the most valuable player in both the Texas and Coast Leagues. There will be red faces all over the scouting profession if Noren flops.

Cleveland is coming up with a notable trio of newcomers in Luke Easter and Herb Conyers, a pair of first basemen, and Harold Saltzman, kid pitcher. Easter is no longer of tender age, and was kicking around the Negro leagues for several years before blossoming as a power-hitting first baseman at San Diego last season. He may not be exactly a postwar product, but Saltzman is. He won 23 games in the Coast League. And Conyers hit .355 at Oklahoma City to win the Texas League batting crown.

THE YANKEES have called in three shining prospects who may not be able to break into the regular line-up this season but at least two of them should, eventually. Their Al Martin, called out of the Coast League, where he was the top second baseman and hit .286, is conceded a fair chance to edge out even Gerry Coleman, who made good so emphatically last season in his first chance at the majors.

Because he is a bonus baby, the Yanks cannot farm out Outfielder Jackie Jensen, their expensive buy from Okland. This former California U. All-American back plunged from college ball directly into Triple A last season and could latch onto one of the regular Yankee outfield jobs, they think. He will be battling, among others, Jim Delsing, who moved up from Kansas City late last season, and hit .350 in nine games for the Yanks.

Boston is solidly in the race for rookie honors with a young outfielder of their own, Tom Wright, who moves up from their Louisville farm with a .368 batting figure. Ted Williams and Dom DiMaggio have left and center field nailed down on the Red Sox, but right field could be a Wright-Al Zarilla battle. Zarilla, capable as he is, may find Wright a rugged challenge.

THE RED SOX are also extending another trial to big Walt Dropo, huge first baseman, who flopped in the Southern League but went out to the Coast and hit .287. He could solve their first-base problem if he can catch up with big league pitching. Bill Goodman is still the favorite for the first base job, but Joe McCarthy's rookies will blister the thin bench that cost him the 1949 pennant.

Connie Mack's rookie crop is not particularly impressive, but it is topped by Bob Hooper, a 19-game winner with Buffalo last season, whose chances are liked. And the Browns, who have turned up more good rookies than any club in the league in recent years, are exceedingly high on a pair of newcomers, Al Widmar, who won 22 games for the hopeless Baltimore club last season, and Sid Schacht a 19-game winner at Scranton.

The Tigers have gone in for mostly seasoned talent like Gerry Priddy to bolster their weaknesses, but they will be gambling heavily on a rookie in one spot—first base. Dick Kryhoski, didn't quite make it with the Yanks last season, but he batted .328 on the Coast and you don't scoff at a figure like that.

GW, Hoyas Battle For Collegiate Title Tonight

Georgetown and George Washington decide the college basketball championship of Greater Washington 9:15 tonight when they clash at the National Guard Armory.

It's the second game between the two teams within two weeks. The Hoyas won the last time, 68-66, on Frank Alagia's layup with 11 seconds left.

Since that one, G.W. has won five straight and jumped from eighth to third place in the Southern Conference. The Hilltoppers had a four-game winning streak before Villanova bumped them off, 73-45, last Saturday.

SEASON'S RECORDS

GEORGETOWN		GEO. WASH.

45 Villanova	73	56 No. Carolina	41
		71 South Carolina	46
		66 Clemson	61
		62 Duke	55

Records of the crosstown rivals are just about even, and the game is rated a tossup. G.W. has won 12 and lost 7. Georgetown has won 10 and lost six.

Alagia has personally accounted for three Hoya victories. Two of his baskets in the last minute won the American University game. Then he broke up the George Washington game.

And finally, a week ago, Frank used his "evil eye" to stare Rutgers players out of five important free throws in the closing minutes as the Hoyas won, 75-73.

Witkin a Rival

G. W. claims it has the answer to Alagia in Gene Witkin, 5-foot, 8-inch playmaker. Doctors at the G. W. Hospital are marveling at Witkin's wide range of vision which permits him to practically see behind him.

Both teams have the boys who can make the game a high-scoring affair. For Goregtown, there's Tommy O'Keefe, whose 14-point average has the Caps interested in him. Tommy scored 19 in the last G. W. contest.

For George Washington there are Johnny Moffatt and Art Cerra. Moffatt has a 12.6 average. His layup in the opening minute of the second overtime broke Duke's spirit last Saturday and enabled G. W. to win, 62-55.

Cerra, who returned to the team this season after being sidelined by illness last year, is just beginning to hit his stride. In his last seven games, Cerra has made 107 points. He had 19 against the Hoyas last time.

Rounding out Georgetown's starting lineup will be oJhn Brown, John Mazziota and Dick Falvey. Other G. W. starters will be Ace Adler and Phil McNiff.

Press-Radio Prelim

Two preliminaries will set the stage for the big game. At 7 o'clock, the G. U. and G. W. Frosh meet. The Hoyas have a 13-0 record compared to G. W.'s 16-2. In a previous meeting, Georgetown won, 75-63.

A press-radio game at 8:15 will undoubtedly provide comic relief on the otherwise tense program.

Fighting for the honor of the press will be Walter Haight, Morris Siegel and Herb Heft of The Washington Post, Merrell Whittlesey of the Star, Al Costello and Carroll Hall of the Times-Herald, Joe Scalli of Associated Press and Dave Slattery of the News.

For radio, there will be Steve Douglas, Dutch Bergman and Charles Cotter of WRC, Bill Brundige and Bob Wolff of WINX, Dean Luce of WMAL, Jim Simpson of WOIC, and Allen Phillips of WOL.

DAVE KLINE, CHARLOTTE HALL STAR, DRIVES IN FOR SHOT

Charlotte Hall Star

Kline Can't Decide Whether To Go for Baskets or Babies

By Bill Gilbert

IF DAVE KLINE decides on a professional basketball career, the field of medicine will lose a bright prospect. Or vice versa. For him, it's a question of baskets or babies.

Dave is the high scoring center on Charlotte Hall Military Academy's basketball team. He enjoys playing basketball and says that he would turn professional after college if given the opportunity.

But Dave, a straight A student, would also like to be a doctor.

Kline, a 17-year-old 6-foot 4-inch, 190-pounder, has scored 266 points in 12 games this season for a 22.1 average. His best performance was when he connected for 39 points against Glen Burnie High School.

His best shot is a one-hand push shot from anywhere on the court.

Basketball isn't Kline's only sport. In football he is a standout end and he is also one of the Cadets' best lacrosse players.

When he isn't reading fictional novels, Duke likes to occupy his spare time by playing a tune or two on his trumpet.

Iowa Promotes Raffensperger To Head Coach

Iowa City, Iowa, Feb. 14 (AP).—Leonard Raffensperger, a 45-year-old home-grown "T" formation expert, is Iowa's new football coach.

He was appointed today to succeed Dr. Eddie Anderson, who resigned unexpectedly January 28. The new coach received a three-year contract at $10,000. Anderson got $12,500.

Raffensperger, little known nationally, came to Iowa as freshman coach in 1948 after 21 years of unusual success in the State's high school ranks. He was a letter-winner in football and basketball at Iowa 23 years ago.

Dr. Paul Brechler, director of athletics, said, "We picked the man we think will do the best job for Iowa. Support for "Raff" in this State is phenomenal.

The new Iowa coach had never seen a football game before he went to the university in 1932 from the small high school at Victor, Iowa, but through the intervening years he has developed a tremendous following among Iowa high schools.

While Raffensperger's fame isn't Nation-wide, he is rated in some Iowa circles as one of the best-informed men in the country in the "T" formation.

He is a close friend of George Halas, coach of the Chicago Bears professional team. "Raff" learned the "T" formation from Halas at the Bears' training camp at Delafield, Wis., while acting as a counselor at St. John's Military Academy.

Fair Harvard Cancels Game With Stanford

Cambridge, Mass., Feb. 14 (AP).—Cancellation of an intersectional football game against Stanford University scheduled for next September 30 at the stadium was announced today by Harvard University.

Provost Paul H. Buck said Harvard requested the game be canceled in order "to lighten a far too heavy schedule."

The university fathers have been under heavy fire by alumni and others since last fall, when the Crimson lost eight of nine games. Among the losses was a 44-0 walloping at the hands of Stanford on the West Coast.

Buck recently submitted a report to the Harvard corporation on the university's athletic program. The contents of the report have not been announced but indications are that Harvard intends to play only Ivy rivals.

Colleges Vs. Pros In Battle of Gate

Tonight, for the fourth time this season, the colleges and pros will be fighting for the patronage of Washington's basketball fans on the same night.

While George Washington and Georgetown are meeting at the Armory, the Caps and Tri-City will be playing at Uline Arena.

G.W. and Georgetown, teaming up for double-headers in the three previous instances, have outdrawn the Caps by a wide margin. The total score is 10,512 for the colleges to 5583 for the Caps.

Boston College Back in NCAA Good Standing

Medford, Mass., Feb. 14 (AP).—The reinstatement of Boston College in the good graces of the NCAA's "sanity code" compliance committee was announced tonight by its chairman, Clarence P. Houston of Tufts College.

"Boston College has stated through its president, the Very Rev. William K. Keleher, S.J., that it is in compliance with the 'sanity code.' Boston College also has furnished the requested information to the compliance committee in support of this statement," Houston said after announcing the first break in the ranks of the seven colleges cited for violations during the NCAA's recent meetings in New York.

"The compliance committee, by a unanimous vote, has accepted Boston College's statements and has addressed the officers of the NCAA that Boston College now is in compliance with the 'sanity code,'" Houston continued.

Curley Gives Information

The other institutions cited with Boston College were Villanova, University of Maryland, University of Virginia, Virginia Military Institute, Virginia Tech and The Citadel. The latter institution, located in Charleston, S. C., has resigned from the NCAA.

John P. Curley, graduate manager of athletics at Boston College, explained that the compliance committee had been furnished information regarding the members of the last two entering freshmen classes that were on the Boston College football squads.

"We were pleased to provide the information requested by the compliance committee regarding the members of the last two freshmen classes who reported for football," Curley said. "It also is pleasing that we were found in compliance because we had felt all along that we were."

Previously, according to NCAA official rulings, all teams representing the seven cited colleges were considered ineligible to compete in its championship events.

Houston's clearance now insures Boston College's hockey team the right to defend its NCAA championship, provided it again is named as New England's entry in the tourney by the sectional selections committee.

McKinney Second Fiddle

Nichols, Otten Also Have Personal Duel

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

It's supposed to be "Bones McKinney Night" tonight at Uline Arena, but Old Bones figures to be lost in the shuffle behind some guys named Auerbach, Feerick, Nichols and Otten.

The jaded testimonial business won't be nearly as interesting as the coach and player duels that promise to cure some of the Caps' turnstile troubles.

AUERBACH

Red Auerbach, the guy mainly responsible for pro basketball in Washington, brings in his Tri-City team for an NBA engagement.

Outspoken Red, original Cap coach who quit last year when he couldn't get more than a one-year contract, gets his first chance to show the homefolks that he's still the old master mind. In his three years here, the Caps won 115 and lost only 53.

In turn, Player-Coach Bob Feerick, already under considerable fire for the Caps' poor showing, hardly can afford to lose this one to his predecessor.

The game also marks the quick return of popular Jack Nichols, recently traded to Auerbach's club for 7-foot Don Otten and $5000. Their duel at center accentuates the coaches' battle.

Although Otten was leading scorer and most valuable player in the National Basketball League last year, the deal has made a lot of the Caps' faithful unhappy.

They point out that Nichols is younger, stronger and a better ballplayer. In his debut here Saturday night, Otten scored nine points. Nichols, in his lone Tri-City start, tallied 18 points against Indianapolis' Alex Groza's 25.

Nichols has one edge, he's more familiar with the Uline court than Newcomer Otten. Reason behind the deal was that Nichols' presence caused some dissension among the Caps. Jack'll be trying to create a good deal more tonight.

In an earlier meeting, the Caps shaded Tri-City, 65-62. Auerbach moans that in that meeting his club scored only 20 goals in 82 shots — its worst performance of the year.

Since taking over after Tri-City lost five of its first six games, Red has steered the club to third place in the Western Division with a 20-27 record. Auerbach's own record is 19-22, even with that of the Caps', 24-27.

Auerbach also has Gene Vance, Illinois "whiz kid," who starred for the Chicago Stags, for home games. In that Washington is practically home for Brooklyn-born Auerbach, he's persuaded Vance to come along to help him win a game that's important to him.

If McKinney doesn't attract all the attention, he, at least, will receive all the loot tonight. Senator Clyde R. Hoey (D., N. C.) will present a shiny four-door Oldsmobile to Bones who will receive assorted other gifts from the fans and various North Carolina organizations.

Denver Beats Boston for 3d Win in Row

Chicago, Feb. 14 (AP).—Denver's Nuggets won their third straight National Basketball Association game and their ninth victory against 39 defeats for the season with an 84-78 decision over the Boston Celtics before 5,000 at the Chicago Stadium tonight.

Denver's triumph was paced by Kenny Sailors, who tallied 29 points on 10 field goals and nine free throws. Boston led for the first nine minutes, but after the count was tied at 15, 17 and 19-all, Denver forged in front for keeps.

In the fourth period, Boston narrowed its deficit to 72-70, but Sailors' clever ball-handling enabled Denver to finish strong.

Terps Upset Virginia; 21 For Murray

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

Maryland's oft-beaten Terrapins last night won another game they weren't supposed to. They poured it on heavily favored University of Virginia, 70-52, before 2000 rooters at College Park.

The Terps had previously won only 4 out of 21 games, but among their victims were such strong opponents as Georgetown and Duke.

Virginia had an 18-11 record and held an early season 66-56 triumph over the Terps in Charlottesville.

Bob Murray and Charlie Mack scored 21 and 19 points as the Terps pulled away in the second half.

Joe Noertker, Virginia's kingpin, contributed 15 to his lost cause. The same Terp zone defense which knocked Duke out of the Southern Conference lead last Friday enshrouded the Cavaliers last night and led to their downfall.

A layup by Mack at the 5-minute mark put Maryland ahead 8-6, and the Terps were never headed. Their widest first-half lead was 17-10 and at intermission it was 31-27.

Virginia gained a 31-all tie a minute after play resumed on shots by Lew Morris and Noertker. But Lee Brawley hooked one in for the hosts and started them on a six-minute rally which boosted them to a 49-34 advantage.

Noertker and company did not give up easily. Joe put in five points, and the Cavaliers were off on their last rally. When Barney Gill laid one in with 5:20 left, Maryland's lead had been sliced to 51-47.

Then came Maryland's biggest splurge. Murray, Mack and Granny Diffie took control of both backboards, and in four minutes they scored 15 points without reply. That was all for Virginia.

In a preliminary, McKinley Tech High nosed out Maryland's Frosh, 49-47.

Cubs 'Steal' Wid Matthews, Dodgers' Chief Ivory Hunter

Chicago, Feb. 14 (AP).—The Chicago Cubs, National League tail-enders for the last two years, reached into the Brooklyn Dodgers' baseball empire today to lure away Branch Rickey's veteran trouble-shooter, Wid Matthews, and install him as director of player personnel.

The 53-year-old Matthews, who had been in Rickey's hierarchy 15 years, will receive a reported $20,000 annually. In succeeding Charlie Grimm, who resigned to manage Dallas in the Texas League, he was given full control of sifting, signing and adjudging baseball talent for the Cubs and their entire 15-club farm system.

Brief Nats' Career

Matthews Popular Here

Wid Matthews, an outfielder, had only a short career with the Washington club but was a popular player. Small for a big leaguer, Matthews had a knack of catching fly balls with his hands cupped and in front of his belt buckle. The Capital's younger sandlot set imitated him almost without exception.

Matthews came to the Nats late in 1923 and began the 1924 season with a flourish, hitting upward of .330 before fading in late June.

In July he was used as an added attraction in the $50,000 deal that brought Earl McNeely here from the Sacramento club of the Pacific Coast League, where Matthews rounded out his active career.

Washington fans beefed loudly when Matthews left, but McNeely proved a consistent hitter and went on to be a factor in the Nats winning the pennant. In the World Series, it was McNeely's grounder, the famous "pebble incident," that won the world title from the Giants.

Matthews was an outfielder for the Philadelphia Athletics in 1923 and the Washington Senators in 1924. He also was a nomad of the minor leagues, serving hitches at Rochester, Milwaukee, Indianapolis, Toronto, Sacramento, Little Rock, Chattanooga and Reading, Pa.

He joined Rickey with the Cardinals and went with him to the Dodgers.

Unlike Grimm, Matthews will not be a vice president, but his powers in acquiring major league players on the theme that "money is no object" will be as full blown.

"Our main weakness has been failure to start getting ready with new players to replace some of the older ones," said Cub Owner P. K. Wrigley.

Wrigley disclosed that the Matthews deal may come as a surprise to Rickey. Matthews, at his home in Hattiesburg, Miss., was said to have been unable to get in touch with Rickey by phone to inform him officially that he was leaving.

Haight Makes Tour in Doghouse

It's Tough to Escape When You're on Road

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

BEFORE my boss wised up, I used to spend the best part of the winter in Florida writing my yarns by day and padding my expense account by night.

Haight

Word has leaked out that I recently spent a week in the Sunshine State and an old customer postal cards: How about one of those Florida stories? Didn't anything happen to you on the trip?"

Well, to tell the truth, something did happen.

I wasn't 300 yards into Florida before the married woman I live with had me in the dog house, a position I often attain in Washington but with a chance to escape at intervals by declaring, "I've got to go to the office."

However, a thousand miles from home, a guy can't come up with an excuse to get very far away from apron strings. So I just had to tote my kennel.

It was rather embarassing, too. All those rich guys on the beaches sunning themselves in front of their elaborate cabanas and poor Haight getting his tan in stripes through the slats of a made-over orange crate.

Since my return, I've given the thing a lot of thought and I'm not wholly convinced that my crime was equal to my punishment.

I'll let you readers — I've always found you good sports—decide.

Here's the dope:

The sun was setting and I was tired as a result of dodging those Georgia road catle. We spotted a new motel just over the St. Mary's River Bridge and coasted in front of the office and restaurant.

Our Walter Just Tries to be Funny

As usual, my brother-in-law and I left the matter of sanctioning accommodations to the women folk. In company of the manager, they left to inspect facilities and, as usual, Les and I sneaked one, if you know what I mean.

There was much activity around the spot. Tourists carrying their luggage into the units; others resting in the chairs outside of their one-night homes and still others awaiting the return of the manager.

Soon my wife appeared on the porch of a cabzin, perhaps a hundred yards away. She cupped her hands to her mouth and yelled, "The cabins are o; k: Go ahead and register."

Then I cupped my hands to my mouth and yelled back, "I've forgotten. What's your name?"

Chesapeake Classic Cut To $20,000

Havre de Grace, Md., Feb. 14 (AP).—A total of $25,000 will be lopped off six stakes to be run during Havre de Grace's 16-day spring meeting.

The biggest cut was made to the historic Chesapeake Stakes, one of the leading tighteners for 3-year-old colts aiming for the turf's triple crowns. The Chesapeake, to be held April 15, is to be reduced from $30,000 to $20,000, the Harford Agricultural and Breeders Association announced today.

The 1 1-16-mile race will come a week before the Wood Memorial in New York which is two weeks before the Kentucky Derby. Greentree Stable's Capot won last year's Chesapeake and went on to be voted the outstanding 3-year-old of 1949.

The Havre de Grace meeting opens April 8 with the Chesapeake Trial. Its added value has been dropped from $10,000 to $7500. Also cut $2500 to $7500 are the Harford Handicap on April 12, the Philadelphia Handicap on April 19. The Burke Handicap on April 22 took a $5000 whack to $10,000 and the Maryland Breeders Stake on April 26 a $2500 reduction to $5000..

Favored Italian Captures Men's Ski Title in Colorado

Aspen, Colo., Feb. 14 (AP).—Zeno Colo of Italy was declared the winner of the men's giant slalom at the world's ski championship today after having traveled the mile and a quarter track in 1 minute 54.4 seconds.

After the two-hour protest period, the judges made all the unofficial times official except for the disqualifications of two Canadians, Yves Latreille and Yvan Tache for failure to go through the ninth gate in a legal manner.

Colo, prerace favorite, lived up to his reputation by slashing home ahead of the best of his 62 rivals by eight-tenths of a second.

Second place went to Fernand Grosjean of Switzerland, with James Couttet of France third and Henri Oreiller of France fourth. The Swiss hit a 1:55.2 clip while the Frenchman was clocked at 1:55.3.

The winner traveled slightly faster than 40 miles an hour through the 35 sets of gates. Today's course was one that demanded daring as well as ski ability. It started with an almost uninterrupted drop of 800 feet in the first 1000 yards. The final half was the same as used by the women in their competition yesterday.

Jack Reddish of Salt Lake City was the fastest American with a time of 2:02.9 that dropped to 26th in the standings.

Other Americans and their placing include:

Jim Griffith, Ketchum, Idaho, 2:03.9 (31 tie); Brooks Dodge, Gorham, N. H., 2:04.9 (36 tie); Toni Matt, Whitefish, Mont., 2:05.5 (38); Steve Knowlton, Aspen, Colo., 2:06.7 (40); Richard Movitz, Salt Lake City, 2:06.9 (42); George Macomber, West Newton, Mass., 2:07.7 (43); Leon Goodman, Sun Valley, Idaho, 2:13.9 (50).

Navy's Wilson Aims for School Scoring Record

Annapolis, Feb. 14.—Center Bill Wilson today begins his stretch drive on Navy's all-time scoring record for a season.

Wilson, who's just 50 points away from the three-year-old mark, set by Ken Stugart, has five games to go. That includes today's 4 p. m. home game against Gettysburg.

Stugart set his record in 17 games, while Wilson will play in 21 by the time the season ends.

Jimmy Cooper Fights Sanchez Next Monday

Jimmy Cooper, the District featherweight champion, makes his second start of the 1950 season next Monday night at Turner's Arena, meeting Jorge Sanchez, Cuban boxer, in the feature 10-round match.

Cooper lost only one bout during 1949, his biggest year. Jimmy dropped the one to Charlie Titone, whom he previously had whipped.

Marlene, Partner Get 69 for Medal

Palm Beach, Fla., Feb. 14 (AP).—Favored teams advanced through first round matches in the 15th annual Everglades Club mixed foursomes golf tournament today but the medalists had to battle to the 18th green to gain a victory.

The team of Marlene Bauer, Midland, Tex., and Reginald Boardman of Palm Beach, which took medal honors with a 69, defeated Ruth Woodward, Fall River, Mass., and W. A. Page, West Palm Beach's golfing fireman, one up.

Ballston Indians Win

The Ballston Indians unlimited team won its 20th game in 21 starts last night, defeating Quarters I, 73-46 on the losers court. Dado Burke and Biff Johnson split scoring honors for the Indians with 17 points each.

Kiki Cuyler Buried in Harrisville, Mich.

Harrisville, Mich., Feb. 14 (AP).—This Michigan town buried its most famous son, baseball player Hazen "Kiki" Cuyler, today.

Most business establishments closed for the rites for Cuyler, 50, who died of a heart attack Saturday while being rushed to an Ann Arbor hospital in an ambulance.

Cuyler went up from Harrisville's sandlots to become a National League star with Pittsburgh, Chicago, Cincinnati and Brooklyn. When he died he was a coach for the Boston Red Sox.

Cuyler first was stricken while ice fishing recently and ordered to bed for 10 days. His condition worsened and he was en route to the University of Michigan Hospital Saturday when he died.

Romans Injured In Car Accident

Mobile, Ala., Feb. 14 (AP).—A Baltimore, Md., golf professional and two other persons were injured in a head-on automobile collision near here today.

Walter Romans, 32, professional at the Baltimore Country Club, suffered possible fracture of his right arm and internal injuries. He had just participated in the Texas Open and was driving to Orlando, Fla., to compete in another tourney.

N. C. State Whips Duke, 68 to 50

Raleigh, N. C., Feb. 14 (AP).—Led by ace forwards Dick Dickey and Sammy Ranzino, North Carolina State gained a revenge 68-50 Southern Conference basketball victory over Duke here tonight.

In their only other meeting this season, the Blue Devil upset the Wolfpack, 54-55.

Ranzino sank 11 field goals and made good on two charity tosses for a total of 24 points. Dickey hit for 20 points.

Friends 7th Grade Wins

Minnesota's Concordia Choir Heard in Brilliant Concert

By Paul Hume

Moorhead, Minnesota's Concordia Choir returned to Constitution Hall last night.

The brilliant A Capella Choir was heard here last year on its way to a tour of Norway. In a new repertoire this season they are as amazing as before in precisely the same ways.

Their precision in pitch, interval singing, and mechanics are beyond the slightest reproach. In rapid sections of a Bach motet or in subtlest changes of a contemporary work of Poulenc, they move with ease and sureness. The dynamic range of their singing stretches from flawless diminuendo to a full tone which broadens at the conductor's will.

The breadth of musical styles covered by this great aggregation is high credit to its leader. He constantly searches out new and worth while materials from old and recent writings.

This worker of miracles in choral singing is Paul Christiansen, son of F. Melius Christiansen, and brother of Olaf, all equally famed in the realm of a capella work.

His faults are the same as those of his conducting family. The tone of the choir, while sensuously beautiful, is of a too-covered kind. It goes hand-in-hand with a system of vowel sounds that is false and unpleasant.

For instance: the phrase "Ye shall have a song" emerges from this choir, "Ye shall hev a song." In other words, they distort vowels, particularly short "e's" and short "a's." This is not natural speech nor natural singing.

Added to these tonal faults, Christiansen tends to prolong overmuch the gorgeous sound of his singers so that musical values are disguised in a luxuriant wealth of tone. His Bach motet is fine. But to present Gregorian melodies, whose essnce is their single line—and rob these lines of their true character by providing them with improper choral support is to misunderstand the nature of Gregorian music.

The romance of Willan's Rise Up, My Love, or Howells' A Spotless Rose, disappears when drawn through the keyhole of protracted sound. These are free flying moments and must move.

Yet for the privilege of hearing such great choral work in some of the finest writings in the field we are indebted to the Concordia and its director.

One on the Aisle—

The Vast Machine Behind a Bomber

By Richard L. Coe

"TWELVE O'CLOCK HIGH," at the Palace, is an exceptionally well-made, moving and interesting picture. With Gregory Peck in the leading role, it tells of an Air Force commander's efforts to instill a teamwork spirit in his men and of the early efforts to make a go of daylight precision bombing.

The story is told in retrospect, an adjutant visiting a bomber command airfield in England six years after the events he recalls.

This has two effects. One looks back on those stark days with a kind of affection, pride and, even, yearning. But one also is impelled to marvel at the insanity of war, at its unspeakable waste and at the unbelievable foolishness of man.

That latter reaction may depend on your own mood, on how this striving for the organization of destruction may affect you. There is something intensely disturbing that the vast organization it took to make this picture is but to reflect the even more awesome organization it took to wage the fight in the real life so close to us all. And with the mistrust and ambitions in today's world to muse upon, the story of these men becomes the more disheartening.

On the personal level, the story tells of one commander whose interest and understanding of his men disrupted his usefulness as a military commander. An old friend comes to take over the group; he pointedly makes of himself a ruthless, cold machine to whip a fighting efficiency into his men. This he does, but with his own total breakdown. But he got results.

Peck and Jagger Score

On the military level, it tells of the bitter struggles to make daylight precision bombing of German hideouts and industry a vital part of the war scheme. What it cost in lives and shattered minds and bodies is made clear, but the means achieve the end.

While it is a long film and too pointed attention is paid toward making the general's switch in personality clear and understandable, it has been purposefully written by Sy Bartlett and Beirne Lay, jr., who adapted the screen play from their own novel.

The acting is forceful and moving, with Gregory Peck, as the general, and Dean Jagger, as his adjutant, especially effective. Also outstanding in the large cast are Hugh Marlowe, as the man Peck replaces; Millard Mitchell, as the ranking general, and Robert Arthur, as a sergeant who aims to please.

While the sky-fighting scenes are not numerous, they come into their own in awful magnificence at the climax of the story, and the scenes around the base are immensely real. Director Henry King has done a splendid job with his voluminous material and actors.

Of the recent spate of war pictures, "Twelve O'Clock High" is the most detailed and carefully wrought, but whether the still, small voice inside you which keeps whispering about the insanity of it all is also a part of the picture is something each individual is left to decide for himself.

"TWELVE O'CLOCK HIGH." Twentieth Century-Fox release produced by Darryl F. Zanuck. Screen play by Sy Bartlett and Beirne Lay, jr., from their novel. Photographed by Leon Shamroy. Directed by Henry King. Music by Alfred Newman. At the Palace.

A Most Fascinating Fantasy

'Madwoman' Is Passing This Way

"THE Madwoman of Chaillot," that most fascinating of modern fantasies, is playing Ford's Theater, Baltimore, this week as part of the Theater Guild-American Theater Society subscription series.

With Martita Hunt in the title role and Estelle Winwood, Eleanora Mendelssohn and Nydia Westman as her sanely mad cronies, the play is surely one all theatergoers should see. It is bound for Chicago and the Coast, so whether this distinguished company will pass this way again is a question.

Since reviewing the play during its first New York week (and praising it mightily), it has been exceedingly encouraging to follow its fabulous popular success, for a long run seemed to its backers the last thing to expect. It completed a full year in New York and has since found high favor in Boston and Philadelphia. Baltimore first-nighters were conspicuously delighted with the glints of wisdom and shafts of humor in this fantastical story of a dreamworld lady who restores love and affection to her world, however briefly, by simply destroying evildoers.

Much has been debated about Maurice Valency's adaptation of Jean Giraudoux's 1945 script. Having read it often and watched its performance several times, I'm convinced he did a superb job of putting it into our language. I have not read the original French, but such glowing speeches as the Chaillot madwoman's description of her day ("To be alive is to be fortunate") and the waitress-ingenue's tender remarks on love ("I hate ugliness, I love beauty") have a crystal loveliness found nowhere else in our contemporary theater. Those speeches and others are comparable to the set arias to which one looks forward in opera.

Miss Hunt's balmy countess is unforgettable. What a rich role it is! Her second act Monday seemed overfussy, to the detriment of the tea party scene; too much flailing of arms and flouncing about destroys the subtle serenity of the scene. Insistence is not in Giraudoux's vocabulary. R. L. C.

Administration Giving Thought to Tightening Of Its Loyalty Program

The Administration is giving thought to a general tightening of its Federal worker loyalty program, it was learned yesterday.

This one recommendation has been made — that applicants for Federal jobs be required to meet higher suitability standards than employes already in Government. Applicants who fail to meet the tougher requirements would be denied employment on "security" grounds rather than for loyalty reasons.

As the system now operates, the Government must produce proof of "questionable loyalty" to blackball a job applicant. This has proved to be a difficult process.

Under the proposed change, the burden of proof would be on the applicant who is accused.

Advocates of the change believe the best way to keep people regarded as questionable security risks out of the Federal service is never to hire them.

Civil Service's Loyalty Review Board discussed the proposed change at a meeting here several weeks ago. The suggestion has been taken up with the Civil Service commissioners and other Federal officials. Officials are at work drafting language to carry out the suggestion, as it would require a change in the executive order that created the loyalty program.

To date, the drafters haven't been able to agree on language. They are attempting to make a clear-cut distinction between "loyalty" and "security." In fact, the grounds for denying employment may be called "unsuitable" or "unfitted." The officials are searching for words that wouldn't disgrace the applicants. As one official explained it:

"We have had numerous cases of people who had backgrounds of irresponsible actions, immoral conduct, etc. We can't get at them, and shouldn't, under our loyalty standards. We believe it would be to the best interest of the Government to keep these people out of the service by ruling them unsuitable, or by some other process that wouldn't hurt them. Many of these people might prove to be excellent employes, but we believe the Government shouldn't be asked to take a chance on them."

The loyalty program of people already in Government is about complete. Thought also was given, it was learned, to the creation of a committee of lawyers to examine the results and procedures of the loyalty program and to make recommendations for possible changes in the light of two years of experience.

Since that time, however, the Republicans have attempted to make a major political issue of the loyalty program, and apparently the restudy idea has been either sidetracked or dropped altogether.

Meantime, officials are reported to be trying to make the "loyalty" and "security" distinction in a proposed bill to give the Government's "sensitive" agencies the power to fire employes on the spot. The Army, Navy, Air Force, and State Department have this authority under temporary law. Atomic Energy and Central Intelligence have similar authority under separate laws.

The proposed bill would make it permanent law. It would be expanded to cover the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, the Coast Guard, and possibly other agencies.

If this bill gets before Congress an attempt is certain to be made to extend it to give all Federal agencies the right to fire employes summarily on suspicion of either disloyalty or questionable security. The accused employes wouldn't need to be given hearings to answer the charges.

NOTES: Civil Service today will begin to accept applications for technologist, $3825 to $10,000; shorthand reporter, $3450 to $4600, and laboratory electronic mechanic, $2450 to $5400. . . . John Kane of Army's public information has been given a coveted meritorious civilian award . . . Virginia's excellent Barter Theater will present J. B. Priestley's drama, "Dangerous Corner," Wednesday night at 8:30 in the Arlington Farms recreation building. Tickets are $1.20. Farm residents can buy them at half price . . . Eugene Logan is retiring as chief of Federal Power's division of project costs . . . The three Civil Service commissioners will meet with the House Postoffice and Civil Service Committee to explain their new efficiency rating plan.

Corning Hit For Delays In Filling School Jobs

Lee, Board Chairman, Says Administrative Posts Should Not Continue Vacant

Adelbert W. Lee, chairman of the Board of Education's personnel committee, yesterday criticized School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning for long delays in filling key positions in the public school system.

At the close of a brief committee meeting, Lee told Corning that "we are not doing the best service for Washington by leaving these top positions unfilled."

Corning assured the board member he expected to submit recommendations for the vacancies at next month's board meeting.

The key unfilled positions are associate superintendent in charge of research, open since last June; assistant director of the first division, vacant more than a year, and executive assistant to the first assistant superintendent in charge of white schools.

Earlier Lee urged his committee to seek a ruling from the Corporation Counsel's Office settling finally under what conditions the personnel committee is authorized to bar reporters from meetings.

The law specifically states that meetings concerning "appointment" of teachers must be closed. But Lee was sharply criticized when he held an executive session recently on the question of promoting Miss Eleanor P. McAuliffe to the principalship of Sousa Junior High School.

The committee deferred acting on Lee's request for a closed-door ruling after John H. Wilson, committee member and an attorney, said he wanted to first conduct a personal study of the legal question involved.

At 3:30 p. m. today, the full board is expected to vote on the recommendation of the building and grounds committee to transfer Central High School to Negro use. Mrs. Sydney Smith, grounds committee chairman, said her group would hold an earlier meeting on routine matters. She said she doubted that her committee would reopen the Central High issue.

Recreation Board Misses School Board

Board of Recreation members are tired of the frequent absences from their meetings of any Board of Education representatives, and yesterday took formal action to try to do something about the situation.

Prompted by Chairman Harry S. Wender, the Recreation Board voted to write the Board of Education to point out the situation and suggest taking note of the Recreation Board's scheduled meeting dates, in order to avoid date conflicts.

In another matter concerning the schools, Recreation members discussed the proposed transfer of Cardozo High School students to Central High School and how it would affect recreation at Central, but took no action.

Wender brought up the Education Board representation problem by pointing out that for the past five months, neither the designated representative, Albert E. Steinem, nor the alternate, Mrs. E. C. Magdeburger, had appeared at Recreation Board meetings.

There has been no representation at 15 out of 47 meetings held in the past three years, he said.

Recreation Superintendent Milo F. Christiansen submitted a report on the use of Central High School for recreation purposes, which showed an attendance of 40,100 during the seven months from last July through January.

The report, which had been requested by Superintendent of Schools Dr. Hobart M. Corning in connection with the high school transfer proposal, was sent to the Board of Education.

Sesqui Looking For 'Double' of G. Washington

Know somebody who looks like George Washington?

The Sesquicentennial Commission is about to begin a Nation-wide hunt for the right man to portray the father of his country in the Paul Green symphonic drama this summer.

Green, now writing the show for the new Rock Creek Park amphitheater, sets these specifications:

Rugged, heavy, almost craggy; at times jovial, at other times deadly serious; big hands, big-featured face with honest, penetrating eyes; lips slightly heavy, a voice of authority; hair gray and slightly grizzled; age just past 50; slightly taller than the average man.

Green is now in New York looking for such a man but the Sesqui Commission yesterday asked Americans everywhere to send in their choice, including a full description and a photo if possible. It will be a paid job for a large part of this year and perhaps next. The show is due to open about June 15.

Police Need In Arlington Stressed

Policemen are scarce in Arlington County.

The county police department reported yesterday that during some parts of the day, one foot patrolman protects an average of 15,625 county residents. Four scout cars, cruising the whole county, help out.

Arlington employed one policeman for every 1625 residents in the fiscal year 1948-49. Cities of comparable size have one cop for every 579 residents, the annual report by Chief H. L. Woodyard, said.

Another shortcoming brought out in the report was that 14 men who attended recruit training schools during the year got "absolutely no training" there in the use of revolvers and none since then.

"This firearm becomes a hazard rather than a safety factor without proper training," the report says.

Since June 30, 1949, the report's closing date, five men have been added to the 77-man force. Woodyard considers 150 men the "minimum necessary to properly protect" the county's present population of 125,000.

Woodyard's problems are further complicated, his report says, by the fact that qualified applicants demand more than the $2400-a-year starting salary for a six-day, 48-hour week, plus extra time spent in court and for making out reports.

In the year's second half, when a new crime reporting system was installed, the report found that 36 percent of the 827 serious crimes reported were cleared up.

At the same time, the country's six detectives had a total of 1777 assignments during the whole fiscal year. "None of these cases had the time devoted to them which they deserve," the report notes.

To Fly to Williamsburg

Capital Airlines today will start special charter flight service for Washington area school children to Williamsburg, Va. Forty-six students of Montgomery Hill Junior High School will be the first group of air tourists, leaving National Airport at 8:30 a. m. Several teachers and parents will accompany the students on Capital's Douglas 4-engine plane.

Stronger Law Sought Against 'Dive' Habitues

Disorderly Conduct Charge Inadequate, Barrett Declares

Major Robert J. Barrett, superintendent of police, yesterday repeated his request for a disorderly conduct law "tight" enough so District police can arrest and prosecute occupants of Washington's dives.

Chief Barrett last Friday told the Houst District subcommittee investigating crime that in most cases, his men can't use the present law to back up arrests.

Habitues of "dives" are arrested and put up forfeits, he said. If they take the case to court, the collateral—$5—is returned since police have no basis or law for a conviction.

"What I would like to have in order for us to be more efficient in our law enforcement in connection with vice," Barrett asserted, "is a more liberal disorderly conduct law.

"It should be something that would give us the power to deal with the patrons of our so-called dives."

A "dive," he said, could be defined as any place where "constant gambling is going on." Or it could be regarded as an establishment selling narcotics or whisky without a license.

Such hangouts for criminals and the criminal fringe, he declared, "sometimes hide behind legitimate fronts like cigar stands or poolrooms."

Barrett also proposed a graduated scale for forfeits in such cases, with collateral ranging from $25 to $100 instead of the present $5 to $25.

The higher forfeits would be leveled at repeated offenders, he said.

The subcommittee will resume hearings at 1:30 p. m. Thursday. Other sessions will be held at 1:30 p. m. Friday, and a morning-afternoon meeting starting 10 a. m. Saturday. The hearing room is Room 445, Old House Office Building.

Retail Credit Group Ends D. C. Convention

The three-day convention of the National Retail Credit Association ended last night with a dinner-dance at the Statler Hotel.

Major topic at the last day's sessions was promotion of charge accounts.

Boy, 14, Dies of Lockjaw, Cut His Arm on Broken Glass

A 14-year-old Alexandria boy died Tuesday of lockjaw at Alexandria Hospital—the city's fourth tetanus death in less than four years.

Jesse

The victim was Jesse Seiders, who lived with his grandmother, Mrs. Florence E. Seiders at 3404 Mount Vernon ave. He apparently contracted the disease January 26.

According to Jesse's mother, Mrs. Margaret Seiders, the boy was out hunting rats in a trash dump when he slipped on a board, cutting his right arm with glass. The wound healed, but days later he complained of fever and had muscular contractions. He then was hospitalized.

The boy's death prompted Dr. T. F. McGough, Alexandria health officer, to urge immediate immunization from the disease for all persons between 4 months and 20 years old. He said the Alexandria Health Department will immunize anyone at no charge at 9 a. m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays at the department's offices, 517 N. St. Asaph st. Private physicians also will give inoculations, he said.

Funeral services for Jesse will be held at 2 p. m. Thursday from Cunningham funeral home, 809 Cameron st., Alexandria. Burial will be in St. Paul's Cemetery.

Besides his mother, of 5533 Manning dr., Bethesda, and his grandmother, the boy is survived by a sister, Miss Florence Esther Seiders, Clarksburg, Md., and four uncles and an aunt.

Reply Due On Survey Thursday

Two Prince Georges Groups Seek Action Before Hearing On Home Rule Bill

The Prince Georges County Board of Commissioners yesterday agreed to give a definite answer Thursday to requests for a survey of the county's government.

A demand for an immediate decision was made yesterday by a delegation that included:

Mrs. Reuben Bogdanoff, president of the League of Women Voters of Prince Georges County; Walter F. Mulligan, president of the Prince Georges County Civic Federation, and Mrs. R. O. Stelzer, representing the College Park branch of the American Association of University Women.

League Sought Survey

All three organizations have been seeking the survey while at the same time opposing the so-called Sothoron home rule bill for the county.

The bill, which would bring about changes in the county government but without a survey first being taken, was introduced at Annapolis recently by State Senator L. Harold Sothoron, Prince Georges Democrat.

Opponents of the measure had hoped to obtain a decision from the commissioners on the survey before Thursday because a public hearing on the Sothoron bill with the county legislative delegation is set for Friday night at Annapolis.

Mrs. Bogdanoff, Mulligan and Mrs. Stelzer reminded the commissioners that they had first requested the survey on January 25, 1949, at which time the commissioners said the request would be taken under advisement and a decision given shortly.

More Time Asked

Board Chairman Harry W. McNamee and Commissioner John H. Beall said the board needed more time to study the request.

The board finally voted to render its decision Thursday.

The delegation has recommended the survey be made by the Bureau of Public Administration of the University of Maryland which would do it without cost to the county.

However, Mrs. Peter Lejins, president of the College Park branch of the American Association of University Women, said last night her organization believes the choice of who will make the survey should be left with the commissioners.

She said the AAUW had gone on record as opposing the Sothoron bill which "purports to give home rule to the county."

Mrs. Lejins said her group has for years urged that action be taken to adapt the county form of government to present day needs, but believes a survey should be made now before any bills are passed changing the county government.

"It would be unwise," she said, "to try to rush a measure of such importance through a 30-day session of the Legislature."

Meanwhile, the Sothoron bill was attacked as "a vicious piece of legislation" yesterday by William R. Turner, president of the Chillum Civic Association, whose executive board has voted to oppose the bill.

Turner said the manner in which the bill was presented shows evidence of a "political conspiracy."

He declared that if the Sothoron bill is passed, the commissioners at present in power in the county will have installed a new government by fiat before the election of new county commissioners late this year.

Plans of Clinic For Alcoholics Get Approval

The Commissioners yesterday formally approved operating plans for the District's long-awaited alcoholic clinic and officially notified Municipal Court it is ready for business.

Clinic Director Leopold E. Wexberg said he will be ready to accept court-committed patients Thursday morning. However, the clinic cannot operate at full capacity until an assistant director and a part-time psychiatrist have been found, he indicated.

Now, for the first time, Municipal Court judges will be able to send a drunk somewhere besides jail. Under the 1947 congressional act creating the clinic, the court may commit a chronic alcoholic to the clinic for treatment for periods up to 90 days.

The clinic will be able to handle effectively only five or six new cases each day, Wexberg said. It will be located in the old Weightman School, 23d and M sts. nw., where Wexberg now operates a clinic for volunteer patients.

The Commissioners yesterday also named two of three members of a committee to work out any hitches in the clinic's operation. Named by the Commissioners were E. Goring Bliss, chairman of the committee which advised the Commissioners on setting up the clinic, and Assistant Corporation Counsel Robert F. Kneipp, who has handled the legal problems encountered in setting up the clinic. The third member will be named by the head judge of Municipal Court.

Cash for Prison-Camp Time Can't Erase Memories, GIs Say

Unofficial, but good, Sergt. William M. Yount hears the news that he is to receive a $1228 check for the 1228 days he spent in a Jap prison camp after surviving the Bataan Death March. Mrs. Yount and daughter, Gerry, 21 months old, share in his enjoyment in their home, 119 Savannah st. se

Official letter stating that he will get $1371 is read by Lieut. Alan W. Parmenter and his wife in their home, 747 S. Florida st., Arlington, Va. Parmenter was captured by the Japs on Guam, when he was a Navy radioman. He was forced to work in a steel mill, where he contracted beri-beri

D. C. Sergeant Gets $1228 for Time in Japanese Stockade

The $1228 check which Sergt. William M. Yount of Bolling Field will get shortly for having spent 1228 days in Jap prison camps will buy a nice chunk of bonds.

The sergeant, who lives at 119 Savannah st. se., spent more time as a POW than any other Washington resident, it was revealed yesterday as the War Claims Commission started dispatching checks.

The money was not the kind its recipients could gloat over. To call it quits they would have to trade their memories away.

That January 1945 day in Yount's camp the Japs suspected food thefts among the Americans and they suspected Yount, who happened to be innocent.

"I was beaten with a pick-handle for three hours," he remembered. "That wasn't so bad." But then:

"Then from 9 a. m. to 12 p. m. they made me sit on my haunches. Then it was solitary confinement for three days . . ."

Yount survived Bataan's Death March. After 1228 days in a prison camp his 200-pound weight was down to 140 pounds.

The 25 area men who will get the checks, a dollar for each day in prison camp, were grateful.

But they seemed to feel also like Sergt. Robert E. Scholten, of 7204 Forest rd., Kent Village, Md., who once got several teeth knocked out in a coal-mine brush with a Japanese:

"They don't have enough money in the United States Treasury to pay me for those 1218 days."

In the entire Washington area the man who spent the most days in a prison camp was Lieut. Alan Weldon Parmenter of 747 South Florida st., Arlington, now stationed in the Navy Department: 1371 days, for which he'll soon get $1371.

Parmenter, then a Navy radioman first class, was captured on Guam. He worked in a steel mill, contracted beri-beri, still suffers its effects.

In the nearby Maryland area the man with the most days is Comdr. John Edward Nardini, of 4101 Warner st., Kensington, Md., now a doctor at the U. S. Naval Hospital in Bethesda: 1250 days.

The War Claims Act grants the $1-a-day payment to POW's who did not receive the standard food established by the Geneva Convention of 1929. Last week it was ruled that all German and Japanese prison camps were substandard.

Virginia: Alexandria—Harry F. Newcomb, jr., 1504 Oakcrest dr., $244; Robert J. Rankin, 213 E. Howell ave., $796; Henri Adrian Richardson, 2310 Valley dr., $247; Fort Myer—Heinz Joseph Ratsch, $1217.

Maryland: Harry E. Pyle, 433 Wood st., Hagerstown, $118; George Madison White, jr., 3810 Powhatan rd., Hyattsville, $237; George M. Fitzpatrick, 4100 Russell ave., Mt. Rainier, $373, and Frank Herndon Bigelow, 602 Monroe st. Rockville, $1198.

Underpass Lag Halts Conn. Ave. Easter Fete

Business Group Votes to Cancel If Work Is Not Done by April 9

The Connecticut Avenue Businessmen's Association last night decided to call off its planned Easter parade if the Dupont Circle underpass is not opened by Easter Sunday, April 9.

S. R. Harrison, deputy highway director, yesterday said he was still shooting for an April 1 opening, but the recent bad weather may force a week's delay.

District officials will confer this morning on the possibility of recommending overtime work to meet the April 1 schedule.

At its meeting last night in the Mayflower, the Connecticut Avenue association authorized its parade planning committee to make a final decision as soon as an opening date is established.

The group also authorized its newly elected president, Horace J. Meyers, and the executive committee, to bring whatever form of pressure is needed to get the job done in a hurry.

Meyers, who pledged all his talents to "getting the damn underpass finished," said this pressure may take the form of a mass march on the District Building by Connecticut ave. merchants waving banners in protest.

As an instance of the suffering which Meyers attributed to the underpass project, he described the plight of one unnamed merchant who had $55,000 invested in his business and had been operating seven years.

Since the underpass construction began, Meyers said, this merchant has had to borrow money from his son, his bank, mortgage his home, and is thinking of going out of business.

Meyers succeeded Leo G. Hessler. Other officers elected were George M. Reveire, first vice president; Miss Rosalie De Voto, second vice president; Arthur E. Meade, secretary; and James C. Dulin, jr., general counsel.

Lamond Heights

Engineer Commissioner Gordon R. Young outlined proposed developments in the area of Lamond Heights last night to members of the Lamond Heights Citizens Association.

The improvements, some to be made this year, include a Kansas ave. underpass routing Maryland through traffic to downtown Washington, completion of arterial highways, storm sewers, a pedestrian underpas at Blair rd. and Sheridan st., and an addition to the Kingsman school.

The association met at the Eastern Star Home, 6000 New Hampshire ave. ne.

Thomas Circle

The Thomas Circle Citizens Association last night urged that the Metropolitan police department be brought to full strength as soon as possible the better to combat crime in the city.

The 16 members who met at the home of the association's president, Mrs. Ella M. Thompson, 1536 16th st. nw., also asked that the realty tax be reduced 15 cents per $100 evaluation. They suggested any deficit caused by the decreased taxes be taken from general sales tax revenues.

The association also reiterated its proposals that Central High School be kept as a school for white children, and that the Capital Transit Co. continue to issue weekly passes and not raise fares.

Barry Farms

The Barry Farms Civic Association last night recommended Elzie S. Hoffman as principal of the new junior high school to be constructed at Stanton rd. and Douglas st. se.

Members also suggested the new South Capitol street bridge be given the name Frederick Douglas. The association met at St. John's CME Church, Stanton rd. and Douglas st. se.

50,000 Line Burial Route Of Curleys

Boston, Feb. 14 (U.P.).—Fifty thousand mourners lined a snow-covered funeral route today as grieving James Michael Curley buried his only daughter and eldest son.

The former Mayor, Governor and Congressman, 75 and ailing, kissed the foreheads of his daughter, Mary Curley Donnelly, 41, and her brother, Leo, 34, and then accompanied their bodies through the snow to Holy Cross Cathedral.

Curley's son and daughter, who died within 14 hours of each other Saturday from cerebral hemorrhages, were buried in the Calvary Cemetery plot where their mother, four brothers and a sister lie.

The city and State officially shared Curley's grief. Flags were lowered to half-staff.

Archbishop Richard J. Cushing of Boston, who presided at the solemn requiem mass in the thronged cathedral, lauded Curley for his strength in the face of double tragedy.

"A tragedy such as that which has befallen James Michael Curley transcends any political, personal or other private considerations," the archbishop said. "It immediately becomes a community sorrow . . ."

Joseph C. Simms

Funeral services were held yesterday for Joseph C. Simms, 70, of 3300 16th st. nw., who was fatally injured last Friday in an automobile accident.

Services were held at the Catholic Church of the Sacred Heart. Interment was in Holy Rood Cemetery.

Dennis J. Cullinane, 75, retired police lieutenant who earned commendation in Congress and from his superiors for outstanding detective work and bravery, died suddenly yesterday at Providence Hospital.

Mr. Cullinane

Lieutenant Cullinane, who was retired for disability in June, 1938, suffered a stroke and was taken to the hospital yesterday morning from his home at 908 11th st. ne. He died a few hours later.

His retirement, due to a fractured kneecap and broken hip suffered while on duty, came after 39 years of service in the Metropolitan Police Department.

It was during eight years of service as a detective sergeant from 1922 to 1930 that he won the praise of superiors for "clearing up more murders than any other detective."

He won commendation on the floor of Congress for his work in helping to solve a case of rape on the Capitol grounds, and earned a service bar for meritorious service and another for bravery.

A native of Country Kerry, Ireland, Lieutenant Cullinane came to Washington alone as a boy in his teens and lived for several years with his sister, the late Mrs. Nell Colbert.

He joined the force in 1899 and rode a bicycle on his duties over almost every Washington street, until he was assigned to a scout car in 1917.

Promoted to detective sergeant in 1922, he was commissioned lieutenant in 1930. First assigned to No. 11 Precinct, he served in No. 9, No. 12 and finally in No. 5, where he was serving at the time of his retirement.

Lieutenant Cullinane had formerly been active in the Holy Name Society and the Knights of Columbus.

He is survived by two sons, John J. Cullinane, a police private attached to headquarters, of the 11th st. ne. address, and Roger J. Cullinane of Landover Hills, Md.

Another son, Jerry J. Cullinane, who also was a policeman, died in 1943. Lieutenant Cullinane's wife, Mrs. Mary Casby Cullinane, died in 1944.

One of a series of advertisements demonstrating the advantages in buying men's clothing bearing the Amalgamated Union Label

19-to-1 his suit is UNION MADE!

Young fellows learn how to pick 'em . . . and older fellows know how. In fact, every man who appreciates what a suit can really do — to make him feel better, look better, chooses union-made suits 19 to 1.

Terrific odds — sure! But men who know like union-made suits for sound selfish reasons: The chances of getting a good suit without a union label are pretty slim. Union-made has proved to mean better-made.

In judging the quality of your next suit, remember that no garment is better than the workmanship that goes into it. The Amalgamated union label* is your positive assurance that every stitch, every seam in your suit was put in by skilled workers . . . that it was made under decent, efficient, secure conditions which enable the best craftsmen to do their best work. And your suit shows it in smoother looks, better fit, better wear.

That's why it pays to insist on the union label, the label of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America. It's the mark of master tailors — for men who know good value.

* Bona fide union-made suits or coats have the label sewed in only during the process of manufacture.

What the Amalgamated Label means:

Efficiency, decent wage standards, healthful working conditions, better garments at lowest possible cost, and the best buy for you.

St. Valentine Smiles on The Barkleys

By Marie McNair

A HEARTS AND FLOWERS Valentine theme decorated the 1925 F Street Club last night for Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Wood Robert's dinner in honor of Vice President and Mrs. Barkley.

Bright balloons drifted across the ceiling; fat red hearts and Cupids were pinned to the draperies. The hostess wore a red gown, in keeping with the day.

Guests seated at four tables had a ranking guest at each. The Veep was at one table, Mrs. Barkley at another. The French Ambassador Henri Bonnet and Speaker of the House Sam Rayburn headed the other tables.

Among others in the group were Mme. Bonnet, the Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. John W. Snyder, the Secretary of Defense and Mrs. Louis Johnson, the Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Oscar Chapman, the Secretary of the Air Force Stuart Symington (Mrs. Symington is ill); Senator and Mrs. Millard Tydings; Mrs. Georgia Neese Clark, Treasurer of the United States; Gen. Omar Bradley, chairman, Joint Chief of Staffs, and Mrs. Bradley; Eugene Black, president of the International Bank, and Mrs. Black; Undersecretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Edward H. Foley, jr.; Mr. and Mrs. James K. Vardaman, and the Secretary of the Senate and Mrs. Leslie Biffle.

Also, Undersecretary of Defense and Mrs. Stephen Early; Mr. and Mrs. William Boyle, Mrs. Harold Walker, mother of the hostess; Mr. and Mrs. Morris Cafritz, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Carusi, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur M. Hill, Mr. and Mrs. William Randolph Hearst, jr.; Mr. and Mrs. Robert Montgomery, and Mr. and Mrs. Wells March.

Danton Walker, newspaper columnist, was here from New York, as was Mrs. Lawrence Tibbett, wife of the opera star. Others from out-of-town were Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Jefferson and Sam Pryor of New York, and Jackson Dick of Atlanta.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert will leave on Friday to spend a day in Miami and then fly to Nassau. On their return trip they will spend two days in Atlanta and on March 2 Mr. Robert and Mayor William Hartsfield of Atlanta will leave by plane for Europe.

Miss Morgenstierne To Be Hostess

MISS MARJORIE MORGENstierne, debutante daughter of the Norwegian Ambassador and Mme. de Morgenstierne, will give a dinner Friday evening for a group of her young friends who are here for the Saturday wedding of Miss Hope Erwin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Parsons Erwin, and MacDonald Goodwin, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Norton Goodwin.

After dinner the company will go to the Friday Cotillion at the Sulgrave Club.

Guests from Birmingham, Ala., where Miss Morgenstierne was a "Princess" in the annual Christmas Festival are: Miss Gage Bush, Miss Betsy Benners, a student at Mount Vernon Seminary; Miss Mildred Acker, who attends Holton-Arms, and Miss Frances Sullivan. The boys will be John Green, a student at Yale; Victor Hansen from the University of Virginia; Barry Hynes and Roy Daly of Georgetown University.

Two Embassies Have Dinner Guests

THE Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Charles Sawyer were ranking guests at the dinner given last evening by the Netherlands Ambassador and Mme. van Kleffens. An embassy dinner was also given last evening by the Ambassador of Peru and Senora de Berckemeyer, who will entertain again at dinner on Thursday evening.

A dinner to be given this evening by the Swedish Ambassador and Mme. Boheman honoring Undersecretary of State and Mrs. James Edwin Webb will include the Ambassador of the Netherlands and Mme. van Kleffens, Senator and Mrs. Clinton Anderson, Senator and Mrs. Estes Kefauver, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Krock and members of the Danish and Swedish Embassy staff. There will be 20 guests in all.

Russell Dorr, head of ECA mission in Turkey, will be honored today at a stag luncheon to be given by the Turkish Ambassador, Feridun C. Erkin. The luncheon will be at the embassy at 1 p. m.

George Wadsworth, United State Ambassador to Turkey, will be ranking guest.

Tea Opens New Exhibit of Art

A TEA and reception at the United Nations Club yesterday marked the opening of an exhibit of painting by Juan Junyer, Spanish artist. Mr. Junyer has just completed a successful exhibition at the Museum of Modern Art in New York, and his exhibit here will last for a month.

Miss Agnes DeLano, chairman of the art committee of the United Nations Club, received yesterday with Mrs. J. Burke Wilkinson, Mrs. C. Law Watkins, Mrs. Robert Portner and Mrs. Joseph Sargent, members of the committee.

Mrs. John McSweeney, wife of the Representative from Ohio, entertained yesterday at a luncheon at La Salle du Bois. A dinner at La Salle du Bois was given by Representative and Mrs. Foster Furcolo.

Symphony Soloist To Be Entertained

THE distinguished young Cuban Pianist Jorge Bolet, who makes his fourth appearance as soloist with the National Symphony Orchestra tonight, will be entertained by Mr. and Mrs. James Pomeroy Hendrick at a small party at their residence immediately following the concert in Constitution Hall.

Mr. Bolet was stationed here during the early part of the war, as Military Attache in the Cuban Embassy. Subsequently he enlisted in the United States Army, and made musical history, while serving in the Army, by staging, directing and conducting the first production of "The Mikado" ever seen in Japan.

Who'll Break Bottle At This Party?

THE Society of Navy Sponsors, Washington branch, will give a luncheon on February 16, at the Kennedy-Warren.

Mrs. William Frederick Weigester is chairman of the committee and Mrs. Jennings Bailey, jr., who is chairman of the Southeast area of the society, will assist.

The West Point Wives of the class of January, 1943, met for a dessert-bridge party at the Fort Myer Officers Club yesterday. Mrs. Walter Cook, jr., and Mrs. William H. Hume were hostesses.

Tobe Says...

Bloused and Belted— That's the 'Top Look'

When it's a big suit spring—as this one promises to be—there are always several fashions that are important instead of just one. I've already told you about the new revival of the strictly tailored suit. And my great favorite, the Balenciaga suit with its nipped-in waist and stiffened hip line—is still the preferred choice of many smart women.

But I think the newest looking suit of the year is the bloused and belted suit—another fashion child of Christian Dior. It is soft in line and can be either dressy or casual, depending on the fabric used. With its drop shoulders, full sleeves, bloused bodice, belted waistline and slender skirt, it is the perfect expression of the "Top Look" in spring suits.

MRS. TRUMAN cuts her three tiered birthday-Valentine cake while Miss Grace McGerr (center) and Mrs. Alben Barkley (right) look on. Scene of the celebration was the American Newspaper Women's Club's luncheon yesterday honoring the First Lady

Mrs. Truman Cuts Ribbons and Cake

By Genevieve Reynolds

MRS. TRUMAN yesterday scissored the ribbons officially opening the addition to the American Newspaper Women's Club headquarters at 1606 20th st. nw. An hour later she efficiently cut a pink, three-tiered heart-shaped cake, a surprise birthday greeting one day after she had quietly observed her own birthday in Blair House.

Occasion was the ANWC's annual luncheon for the First Lady, who is an honorary member of the club. The double-barreled event also celebrated the opening of the organization's spacious new rooms adjoining the old clubrooms next door at 1604 20th st. nw.

Beside Mrs. Truman throughout the event was Mrs. Alben Barkley, wife of the Vice President. The First Lady wore a becoming two-piece dark wool suit and matching hat. And the Veep's missus wore a chic black wool dress and a small, white sailor hat.

Sharing the spotlight with the Nation's First and Second Ladies were associate club members, among whom can be found Cabinet, Supreme Court, diplomatic and congressional wives, plus leaders of residential society. Through jingles and verses read by Miss Ruth Dean, Miss Ruth Crane, Mrs. Lee Walsh, Miss Margaret Germond and club President Grace McGerr, the some 200 members were requested to identify their associate and honorary members.

Mrs. Dean Acheson, wife of the Secretary of State, was identified through verse as were other associate members including Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney; Mrs. Fred Vinson, wife of the Chief Justice; Mrs. Tom Clark; Mrs. Barkley; Mrs. Ben McKelway; Mrs. Joseph R. Farrington; Mrs. Stanley K. Hornbeck; Mrs. Jesse Donaldson; Mrs. Robert Y. Kerr; Mrs. Burks Summers; Mrs. J. William Fulbright; Mrs. Clinton Anderson; Mme. Munthe de Morgenstierne, wife of the Dean of the Diplomatic Corps; Mme. Erkin, wife of the Turkish Ambassador; Mrs. Georgia Lusk, former Congresswoman from New Mexico and now member of the War Claims Commission; Mrs. Curt C. Schiffeler, who donated the club's birthday cake, and Mrs. Hobart Brooks, founder and honorary member of the club.

Still other associate members present were Mrs. John R. Steelman, wife of the Presidential Adviser; Mrs. Robert Whitney Imbrie, and Mrs. Edgar Morris.

Receiving the guests were Mrs. Margaret Hart Canby, founder and former president of the American Newspaper Women's Club.

First Lady's Date Book Filled Right Up to Lent

By Elizabeth Maguire

MRS. TRUMAN'S social calendar is filled with engagements for this week and right up to Ash Wednesday on February 22. During the Lenten season, the First Lady has few if any engagements, and she has planned no entertaining.

She will entertain at two teas today at Blair House. The first at 4:30 p. m. will be for wives of officials and others who are on the White House list, while to the second tea at 5:30 p. m. she has invited women employes of the White House office staff. About 100 guests are expected in each group.

Mrs. Truman will lunch tomorrow with Mrs. John Steelman and members of the committee for the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra at the Mayflower Hotel at 1 p. m. The First Lady is serving as honorary chairman of the sponsors' committee for the orchestra, which is making its first appearance in Washington on March 11. Others on the committee are Mrs. Alben W. Barkley, Mrs. John Snyder, Mrs. A. Lloyd Symington, Mrs. Clark Clifford, Mrs. Harry Vaughan and Mrs. James Vardaman.

Members of the College Club, Baltimore's branch of the American Association of University Women, will be received February 15 by Mrs. Truman at Blair House at a tea at 4 p. m. The following day, February 16, Mrs. Truman will have a luncheon at Blair House for ladies of the Supreme Court and wives of the Undersecretaries of the executive departments. Small gold chairs will be used and guests will number 18, as opposed to the usual guest list of 16 on formal occasions where larger chairs are required by protocol.

The wedding of Miss Hope Erwin and Macdonald Goodwin on Saturday will be attended by the First Lady, who is a good friend of both families. Miss Erwin is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Parsons Erwin, and her fiance is the son of Judge and Mrs. Clarence Norton Goodwin. The marriage ceremony will take place at St. John's Church, followed by a reception at Abremont, home of the bride's parents.

On the evening of February 18, Mrs. Truman will attend the dinner to be given by the Business and Professional Women's Club of D. C. at the Shoreham Hotel. A meeting in observance of National Brotherhood Week, to be held Monday, February 20, at 2 p. m., at the Shoreham Hotel, will be attended by the First Lady.

Brotherhood Week is observed annually during the week of George Washington's birthday. It is sponsored by the National Conference of Christians and Jews, Inc., which was founded in 1928 for the purpose of stimulating a year-round program of education and intergroup understanding, and to better human relations in the business, social and political lives of the United States.

The last engagement on Mrs. Truman's books before Ash Wednesday is the Thrift Shop sale, which she will attend on Tuesday, February 21, at 1501 New Hampshire ave. A yearly event, proceeds from the sale go to the support of children's charities in the District.

Mrs. McCullers Is Bride of Mr. Hughes

The marriage of Mrs. Margaret Bentley McCullers of Washington and San Francisco to Charles Everett Hughes of Boston took place yesterday in Washington. The ceremony was performed at 9:30 a. m. by Judge D. Quinn in his chambers at the Municipal Court Building.

The bride was attended by Mrs. Bruce McClure and Edward Williams was best man. After a wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Hughes will return to Washington to live.

The bride is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Charles Harvey Bentley of San Francisco. Mr. Hughes is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Charles William Hughes of Boston.

Mother of 2 Children, Having Been Common Law Wife, Is Offered Marriage by Man Twice Her Age; She Loves Him and Asks About Making Him Happy

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have two children, ages three and six. I was not previously married, but was a common law wife. Now I have found some one who loves me enough to overlook this, and he has asked to marry me.

Glen is 24 years older than I am actually, but he does not appear to be that much older. He has been active in sports and has kept up with the years as much as one might at 50. He is steady and settled, which is in his favor, and he has been married before and his wife died. In the 20 years he has been a widower, he has asked none but me to take her place, and this I consider a great honor, because his first marriage was a real success.

Glen is very thoughtful and kind to me, also he likes children and is very good to mine and they like him,—and these are some of the things that have made me realize that I love him.

Is Age Difference Serious Handicap?

HOWEVER, when he proposed marriage I suggested that we wait six months at least, to allow time for both of us to open our eyes and be sure we know what is happening. I want with all my heart to make him happy if we marry, but isn't it quite uncommon for people to marry when one is so much older than the other? And do you think that difference might make him unhappy later?

In conversation last night he told me that I am as much older than my years as he is younger than his age, really; and therefore our thoughts and feelings aren't so widely separated as 25 years might sound. But I'd like your opinion on my problem (if any); so, from the little I've told you, can you help me determine whether or not it would be a mistake for us to marry? Please answer soon. E. C.

One Can't Make Another Happy

DEAR E. C.: In your letter, here simplified, you labor the question of whether you can make Glen happy if you marry him. As to that, I must say that nobody can make another person happy. Like the Kingdom of Heaven, happiness is within. And one who doesn't find its wellspring there doesn't find it anywhere.

Happy marriages are those in which two individuals (inwardly on good terms with life and self "as is") team up to share the experience of living, because they have a sense of self redoubled comfortably, of heightened joy and blessings multiplied, when in each other's company. But if you pair a sourpuss with a happy person, the former cannot enter or share the latter's thoughts and feelings, hence involuntarily pulls against his buoyancy, trying to drag him down to gloomy levels of interchange.

A happy nature readily inclines to a large view of things. It is disposed to be generous, friendly, affectionate, forgiving and helpful—not for self-selling reasons carefully calculated, but because inner happiness flows out in spontaneous manifestations of good will towards everyone.

Dispositions More Important Than Age

SO, RATHER than try to guess, at this point, what kind of partner Glen might be, I advise you to study his behavior in his relations with other persons, as closely as possible in a quietly observant way, during the next six months. The purpose of this study would be to discover whether he has an authentically good disposition (hallmark of a happy nature), that shows in all his dealings; or whether he is being simply especially nice to you during courtship, meanwhile having habitual troubles, large and small, on the side with other folks.

Concerning your fervent desire to make Glen completely happy if you marry him, it is constructive, of course, to care wholeheartedly about the beloved's real welfare. But I repeat, one person cannot "make" another happy; and furthermore, it is mutually destructive, in subtle insidious ways, for a married pair to interact on the theory that the man's happiness is all-important, and the woman's less so—or vice versa. Each should have a profound sense of intrinsic consequence, also an equal sense of the other's dearness, and their love will blend harmoniously in reciprocal consideration that dissolves all differences.

In brief, to sum up, if you and Glen care greatly for each other and have the native disposition to be happy, helpful and cooperative in all circumstances, then it doesn't matter about the age difference. As you say, it is quite uncommon for a man to marry a woman half his age; but still, the most popular romance in recent global history features a bridegroom 72, and a bride 34 years younger, namely—the perfectly charming Vice President and Mrs. Alben Barkley, the toast of Washington this winter. M. H.

Mary Haworth counsels through her column, not by mail or personal interview. Write her in care of The Washington Post.

Silver Patterns Need Not Match Furnishings Exactly; Good Design Will Harmonize With Any Interior

DEAR ANNE:
I want to start my silver (flatware) service but am undecided as to the type of pattern. Most of our furnishings are along the modern trend but I do not care for the very plain silver patterns as they scratch so easily. Do you have any suggestions? Sophie Kanofsky, 69 Hawaii ave. ne.

It's true that the silver patterns considered most truly "Modern" are plain, although some have slight trim around the edge and others of the Swedish or Danish type have ornate adornment at the tip of the handle.

There's this to remember, though, if you can't find a modern design that you want: Silver patterns need not conform to any style or period of decoration. If the pattern is well designed and fairly conservative, it will harmonize with any type of interior. There are many patterns on the market that are equally at home with modern table appointments and antique reproductions.

DEAR ANNE:
Can you give me a good recipe for old fashioned chicken pie? G.W.F.

The recipe that follows is from way out West and it's called Ranch Style Chicken Pie. It was given me by lyric soprano Frances Yeend, who sings tonight in the Departmental Auditorium in the fifth of the Sesquicentennial Concerts. Miss Yeend comes from Washington State, makes chicken pie this way:

RANCH STYLE CHICKEN PIE

1 small fowl or roasting chicken; 1½ teaspoons salt; 6 small onions, boiled and sliced; 1 cup cooked peas; 1 tablespoon minced celery leaves; 1 tablespoon minced parsley; 4 tablespoons flour; black pepper; standard recipe pastry dough using 1 cup flour.

Put chicken in 4 cups water (enough to cover), add salt and bring to boil. Let simmer until tender. Cool in broth. Drain and reserve broth.

Leave the legs and second joints of the chicken whole or bone them if desired. Remove meat from back, neck, and wing tips. Arrange the meat in layers in casserole with onions and peas, sprinkling each layer with celery leaves, parsley, and pepper.

Blend flour to a smooth paste with a small amount of the cold broth and add about 2 cups of remaining broth. Cook mixture until thickened, then add to casserole.

Roll pastry dough ⅛-inch thick and cut into strips which may be arranged over the top of the casserole lattice fashion. Bake in hot oven 15 minutes or until pastry is brown. Serves six.

DEAR ANNE:
In answer to M. B., who asked recently about a cooperative colony for old people in New Jersey, the director and address are:

Mrs. Effie Morrison,
The Colony for the Aged,
Millville, N. J.

Apartments are rented and homes built at a minimum cost. The houses must conform in architecture and be willed to the colony.

MRS. W. F. JOHNSON, Jr.,
901 North Wayne,
Arlington, Va.

Besides Mrs. Johnson, several other readers sent information about this colony. Mrs. Frank Browning of Falls Church gave a tip that helped me locate two articles on the subject at the Public Library: "Not Quite Heaven," by Dr. George Lawton, in the Saturday Evening Post, for May 9, 1942, and "Old Folks Aren't Useless," by J. C. and Helen Furnass, in the same magazine for January 13, 1945.

A reader who has visited the place—Mrs. K. S. Corson of Arlington—writes: "The colony is very desirable, either for an old married couple or someone alone." Alberta M. Reed of Takoma Park writes she has an article on the place M. F. can read. Her number: Sligo 7073.

A. A. C. speaks of the town as the "Roosevelt Park Colony for the Aged" at Millville, and says there was an article on it in the June, 1948, Coronet. She also says she has made some effort to arouse interest in starting such a colony here in Washington.

"There is a need for it here," she says. "But real estate people tell me the land is too expensive and would cost more than retired people could afford."

THIS gracious modern table setting features the new Fairfield china in golden lily design, silver in the Modern Classic Pattern, "400" glass, and place mats of Irish linen. From the new Lenox Shop at Garfinckel's opening today

Baker's Dozen Club Plans Sale to Aid Youth Center

Chinese bric-a-brac and art objects will go on sale Sunday at Inspiration House, 1867 Kalorama rd. nw., to help raise funds for a Youth Center for underprivileged Washington teen-agers whose homes do not contain the bare necessities of living—much less the frills.

The sale of Chinese articles, to be held from 1 to 8 p. m., has been undertaken by the Baker's Dozen, a group of women leaders in Washington's Negro community.

The Baker's Dozen—originally 13 but now 15—began their work during the war, providing a teen-age canteen at the Northwest Settlement House. But the Settlement House, catering to all ages, could let the teen-agers have the building only one night a week.

Through benefits and private donations, the Baker's Dozen raised money to buy two buildings, at 1509 and 1511 4th st. nw., in the heart of a densely populated area where juvenile delinquency flourishes. Since then the group has raised more than $15,000 for renovations to make the two houses interconnectiong and for other improvements.

To Finance Youth Center

With Sunday's Chinese Tea and Bazaar, the Baker's Dozen hopes to add enough to the renovation fund to buy equipment for the snack bar, the hobby rooms, the library, the stage, and to finance the operation of the Youth Center which is expected to need one full-time staff member and two part-time staff members in addition to the volunteer services of the Baker's Dozen.

Items to be sold at the bazaar—jewelry, vases, bookends, ash trays, figurines, slippers, materials, baby's dresses—are priced below $15 in most cases. There will be a few more expensive collector's items, and there will also be a thrift table of articles at $1 and under.

Tea and fortune cakes will be served.

Members of the Baker's Dozen are Mrs. Ruth Spencer, president; Mrs. Mildred U. Alfred, Mrs. Maxie P. Brooks, Mrs. Lucille D. Roberts, Mrs. Beatrice M. Johnson, Miss Beatrice Y. Black, Miss Flaxie M. Pinkett, Mrs. Hazel B. Adams, Mrs. Henrietta B. Franklin, Mrs. June C. Hackney, Mrs. Sarah H. Irving, Mrs. Mignon Johnson, Mrs. Carol H. Parris, Mrs. Irma P. Smith and Mrs. Dorothea B. Stewart.

Fashions Shown at Benefit

D. C. Has a Heart—for Carnegie

By Peggy Preston

WASHINGTON'S Heart Association was richer by an estimated $4000 today as a result of yesterday's benefit luncheon-fashion show at the Shoreham.

A predominently feminine throng, numbering more than 600, filled the hotel's Blue Room for the event, which featured the 1950 spring collection of Designer Hattie Carnegie.

Despite the weather, the ladies were dressed for the occasion, at least in so far as their headgear was concerned. Sprightly straw bonnets, harbingers of the coming season, were seen at almost every luncheon table, vying for honors with the handsome new fashions direct from the salon of La Carnegie.

Mrs. Moran Sets Pace

Blond Mrs. Robert E. Moran, chairman of the benefit which marked the midway point in the current campaign for Heart Association funds, set the fashion pace for the day in her miniature green straw hat matching her spring suit. Mrs. Bernard J. Walsh, chairman of the program committee, wore a tiny gray straw calot with spray of white flowers across the brow.

Miss Carnegie's straws, ranging from picture versions to head-hugging cloches, took second place to her collection of suits, linen frocks and beautiful ball gowns.

This season, as in the past, this designer has called on braided silk cord, fringe, and jewel-studded embroidery to enhance some of her handsomest designs.

Flight of Fancy

"A la carte" is the name of her newest flight of fancy—a platinum version of the once humble "separates." Daytime and evening skirts of jewel embroidered linen, chiffon or organdy are combined with a choice of handkerchief linen blouses. In the latter the design may follow the new dropped-shoulder line, or be low-cut and strapless. Often these little tops are embroidered in jewels also, completing a sparkling, interesting costume.

The Carnegie suits follow much the same design as in former years, with rounded lines, short jackets and novelty in detail. Shoulder pads are missing completely, and skirts in general are slim and short, reaching to mid-calf or just above.

Fashions for the show were presented by Julius Garfinckel & Co., and Miss Nancy Osgood, director of women's activities for radio Station WRC, was commentator. A program of music featured Gene Archer, vocalist, and Eddy McIntyre, pianist.

PHA Pact Signed In Greenbelt Crisis

By Council

Montgomery Fire Code Approved

A detailed fire code encompassing practically every phase of fire protection was approved yesterday by the Montgomery County Council.

The code, drafted by a 13-member committee headed by Albert E. Conradis, former county public utilities agent, will take effect March 16. Approval marked culmination of more than two years' work by the committee.

The code provides for the annual licensing of certain types of businesses and the issuances of permits for public performances or assemblies within buildings and capacity certificates for places of assembly holding more than 100 persons.

The threat of a suspension of city services in Greenbelt, Md., was eased last night when the city council consented to a temporary agreement with the Public Housing Administration.

The council passed a resolution authorizing Mayor Elizabeth Harrington to sign a two-month pact with the PHA on a pro-rata basis. If necessary, the temporary agreement could be extended for a third month.

Residents of Greenbelt, a Federally-owned city, pay their taxes in their rents. Annually, the PHA makes a payment "in lieu of taxes" to the municipality to finance city services.

This year the council had asked for a payment of $182,734 for the year of 1950.

The agreement has been held up because the PHA and the city government are in dispute over about $18,000 contained in the total budget.

Pending agreement on the annual payment, the PHA has consented to making temporary prorata payments based on the $182,734 figure. From this, however, the PHA has made economy cuts of about $4500.

The council's resolution must be approved by City Solicitor Ralph W. Powers before being submitted to the PHA.

College Asks $250,000 for Construction

The Montgomery County Board of Education yesterday heard a plea from the Montgomery Junior College advisory board for inclusion of $250,000 for permanent construction for the college in the 1950-51 school budget.

A delegation headed by Dr. Harold P. Morris of 1112 Noyes dr., Silver Spring, also asked the establishment of day classes.

The college, now housed in temporary structures on the Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School grounds, with overflow classes using rooms in the high school, operates on an afternoon and evening schedule.

The board also announced at its meeting in Rockville the award of a contract for construction of the McKenney Hills Elementary School to the Greenhill Engineering Co. of Washington for $149,363. The school, to contain seven rooms, will be near Georgia ave. and Forest Glen rd., Silver Spring.

A progress report of school construction submitted by assistant superintendent of schools, Richard E. Carpenter, explained contracts for expenditures of $3,005,377 of the $5,004,000 allocated for the fiscal year 1949-50. Additions to three schools, Oak View, Somerset, and Alta Vista elementary schools, have been completed and four new schools will be finished by spring, he stated. The new schools are Vliers Mill, East-West Highway, Homewood and East Rockville elementary schools.

College Park Acts to Lessen Traffic Perils

Increased traffic safety for College Park residents was stressed by Mayor William A. Duvall and the town council at the monthly meeting last night.

In response to complaints from inhabitants of the affected area, an ordinance was passed to eliminate all parking on the north side of Berwyn rd. from 51st pl., to the Baltimore blvd.

Other complaints dealing with traffic hazards in the immediate vicinity of the University of Maryland resulted in the council's approval of a strong petition to the Maryland State Roads Commission for traffic light improvements at Guilford rd. and at the north and south entrances to the university, where each of those roadways is intersected by the Baltimore blvd.

Requested improvements included installation in existing traffic lights of left turn facilities at the three points. It was pointed out each of the three locations handles three-lane traffic on each side of the dual highway and the intensity of traffic at the university gates creates heavy jams during peak load hours.

New Citizens Are Warned By McCarran

Senator Pat McCarran (D., Nev.) yesterday warned a group of newly naturalized citizens in District Court that "if any of you come with the ulterior motive of tearing down our Government it were better a thousand times if a millstone had been tied around your neck" and you were dropped in the ocean.

But the Senator predicted a bright future for those prepared to devote the full force of their minds, bodies and hearts to the ideal of freedom and democracy.

McCarran addressed the group of 40 at swearing-in ceremonies before Federal Judge Richmond B. Keech.

Those who took the oath were:

Emmy Gration, 29, of 4204 13th st., S. Rep. Combs Released From Hospital Here

Representative Jesse M. Combs (D., Tex.) was released from Emergency Hospital yesterday after suffering scalp lacerations sustained in a traffic accident at 18th and K sts. nw. Monday night.

Doctors ordered the 60-year-old Congressman to rest the remainder of the week. It had been feared Combs suffered a brain concussion, but x-rays failed to reveal any serious injuries.

Gannes Center Guest

The Jewish Education Committee of the Montgomery County Jewish Community will have as their guest tonight, Abraham P. Gannes of Philadelphia. Gannes is director of the Philadelphia Council on Jewish Education and also chairman of the administrative committee of Gratz College.

Work Plans For Rockville By-Pass Set

Construction of the Rockville by-pass on route 240 will definitely begin early this summer, Mayor G. LaMar Kelly of Rockville declared yesterday.

Kelly said he and City Manager John G. McDonald were told during a recent conference with State Roads Commission officials that the project had received a priority in the 1950 program and has been approved for action by Governor William Preston Lane, jr.

The by-pass, going around the Montgomery ave. business district, will leave route 240 at its intersection with Viers Mill rd. south of the town and rejoin it on the north a block south of Lincoln Park subdivision. It will be about 1 mile long.

Kelly said McDonald is preparing a statement of costs and will make recommendations as to financing of Rockville's portion of the total cost.

Health Club Head Files Petition Of Bankruptcy

John F. Hansen of 514 Tulip ave., Takoma Park, Md., a physical therapy technician who operates the Columbia Health Club at 1547 I st. nw., yesterday filed a petition of voluntary bankruptcy in Baltimore Federal Court.

Hansen alleges liabilities of $10,370.42 and assets of $2076, mostly in equipment of his health club.

Among the liabilities listed was $2050 which Hansen said he owed in rent for the I st. establishment. He is in debt for $1200 to the General Conference of Seventh Day Adventists and owes the St. Helena (Calif.) Sanatarium $1000, according to the petition.

FBI Agent to Talk To Girl Scouts Today

George L. Carroll, special agent of the FBI will speak to the Girl Scout Council and Leaders of Arlington today at 8 o'clock at St. George's Episcopal Church. His subject will be "Today's Challenge."

Carroll has been with the Federal Bureau of Investigation since 1941. Prior to that he practiced law in Wooster, Mass. He has been a teacher and athletic coach at Wayside School for Boys, S. Sudburry, Mass.

Tea Slated Today

Residents of Bradbury Heights are invited to attend a tea at the Adelaide School, 44th and H sts. se., today from 2 to 3:30 p. m. The tea will be given by the Davis P-TA in honor of Mrs. Elinor McAuliffe, new principal of Sousa Junior High School.

In House Test

Contraceptive Dispenser Ban Gains

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 14 (AP).—A move to bypass a bill aimed at outlawing vending machine sale of contraceptives was defeated in the House of Delegates today, 88 to 27.

The result is the House will take a final vote on the measure—mainly backed by a Prince Georges County group—which would make unlawful the retention of the coin machines in restrooms.

The House committee on public health reported favorably on the bill, which had a committee hearing last night. Immediately there was a motion to send the measure back into committee.

Delegate Rockenbaugh (D., Baltimore County) told the House there may be a situation in Prince Georges County which required such a bill. However, he could not see why there should be any State-wide law covering the situation.

Delegate McLeish (D., Prince Georges), sponsor of the bill, said a Prince Georges group had appeared to testify last night, and added letters have been received from other counties asking that the machines be banished.

Meanwhile, Governor Lane's proposals to reduce income tax bills of most Marylanders by about $1,240,000 today won the approval of the Senate finance committee. This means at least two of the four bills making up the program could become law within the next several days.

The bulk of the savings $989,000—would come from two bills to raise the exemption for each dependent of a taxpayers from $400 to $600.

'Berlin Command'

Atmosphere Icy as Clay and Dulles Confer in Berlin

By Brig. Gen. Frank Howley

This is the eleventh of 12 articles taken from the new book, "Berlin Command," appearing daily in The Washington Post. The author, Brig. Gen. Frank Howley, battled the Russians for four years, from 1945 to 1949, as deputy commander and then commander of American forces in Berlin.

THE number of important visitors to Berlin seemed to increase during the blockade.

In October, 1948, even John Foster Dulles, who everyone assumed would be the next Secretary of State if Dewey became President, flew into Berlin to look over the situation.

Dulles was reported to be harboring a certain antipathy toward General Clay, and we all watched events with interest.

On Sunday, I was invited to lunch at Clay's home. When I arrived, I found Dulles in front of the fireplace with General Clay, Robert Murphy, James W. Riddleberger, and a State Department aide brought along by Dulles.

Despte the cheerful, leaping flames, the climate around the fireplace was anything but warm. Ice divided Dulles and Clay. We sat down to lunch, and I was given the foot of the table, facing Clay.

Murphy is a man of great charm, but even under his influence, the little conversation carried on at the table was stilted. The only subject on which Clay and Dulles appeared to agree was Rhine wine. On that theme they were in perfect accord.

Over the coffee, Clay suggested that perhaps the visitor would like to meet Dr. Reuter, the unseated lord mayor. Dulles turned to his State Department adviser and asked if any political difficulties were involved in such a meeting.

"I have the greatest respect for the opinions of General Clay and Mr. Murphy," the State Department man said. "If they think it is all right, I think so, too."

"I might just as well have left you in Paris," snapped Dulles, "if that's all the advice you are able to offer me."

REUTER arrived soon after lunch and we all sat down in a circle with Reuter, the German. Their chairs were only three feet apart, but their backgrounds and thinking were 3 leagues apart. The two talked for perhaps 10 minutes.

"Will the Germans stand fast during the winter?" Dulles demanded to know, wasting no time on preliminaries. "Or will they give up, accept Russian aid, and get us out of Berlin rather than take more suffering?"

Reuter's reply was emphatic and had the unmistakable ring of sincerity. "The people of Berlin are accustomed to suffering," he reminded Dulles. "We are willing to suffer a great deal more to escape Russian domination."

Dulles seemed impressed. He then asked Reuter if he thought that the Russians would attempt to bring in large quantities of food and coal in order to embarrass the Western powers in Berlin.

Where would the Russians get more food or coal, unless they robbed the Germans in their own zone, Reuter asked reasonably. There were great shortages, he added, not only in the Russian zone of Germany but in Russia herself and in her satellite countries.

"I think the Russians will be reluctant to splurge in Berlin," he added. "They are more afraid of the Americans really putting on a show than we are of the Russians doing the same thing."

This was about the extent of their conversation. At its conclusion, Dulles and his civilian aide retired to Clay's study and prepared a press release reaffirming the American intention to stay in Berlin. With complete accuracy, Dulles added that this was an extraordinary situation, since allies of only a few years ago were no longer allies. The talk with Reuter was not mentioned.

Dulles returned to the States. Clay followed him, to give a speech in New York at the Alfred E. Smith Foundation dinner.

The newspapers were full of pictures of the event, but the best one showed the principal guests: Cardinal Spellman, Dewey, and Clay.

AN AMERICAN in Berlin seized the picture and promptly wisecracked, "There you have the man who prays on Sunday, the man who talks on Sunday, and the man who works on Sunday."

The last remark referred to Clay, who had been so busy in Berlin that he was compelled to ignore the day of rest.

Christmas weekend a year later was of great importance for Military Government in Berlin. Two groups of top VIP's arrived.

Bob Hope, Jinx Falkenburg and Jane Russell composed one group sent to cheer Americans in Berlin.

The other included Vice President Alben Barkley, Secretary of the Army Kenneth C. Royall, Secretary of Air William S. Symington, General Jimmy Doolittle, Ambassador Bedell Smith, Elmer Davis, and a battery of other heavy artillery and their wives.

The day after Christmas, Secretary Royall called on me at my office for a briefing on the Berlin situation. It was the strangest "briefing" I ever gave.

First, I asked Royall how much time he had. He said he had "enough time."

I then started with the history of Berlin, beginning at the Elbe. Royall interrupted and said, "I know all about that."

I made a second start, talking about the Kommandatura. Again he cut me off by saying he was familiar with that, too.

I started a third time, along the lines of how the Russians had slapped on the blockade. "I have all that material back in my office," he said. "And I don't want to see any more charts, either. I've seen hundreds of them."

"Well, what the hell do you want?" I asked.

Royall seemed startled, then he grinned.

"What I want to know are things that apply today," he said, "not ancient history."

THEN HE BEGAN asking specific questions. "For instance," he said, "what would have happened if we brought an armored convoy into Berlin when the blockade started last June?"

I wasn't troop commander and therefore was aware of the limitation of my knowledge on that subject. But I said that if he wanted a direct answer he could have it.

"We would have got our derrieres shot off," I replied—except that I have never been known to use the word derriere.

"Then what would happen if we brought one in this month or at some future date?" he pursued.

"We'd have a better chance," I assured him. "But you must remember that the Russian decision will be based solely upon their estimation of our willingness to fight, weighed against their own ability to fight and to put on a better show than we do. Our chances will increase as the willingness of the American people to fight increases, and as our rearmament progresses."

The Army Secretary asked a number of questions about what steps the Russians could take in Berlin to injure us further.

"Short of marching in," I replied, "they can't do much more than they've done already. If the Russians had thought there was anything more they could do to us, they would have done it already."

I QUOTED him facts and figures, and then went through my favorite topic—retaliation, counterblockade, and other aggressive measures, until the blockade was lifted.

Royall never indicated to me whether he approved or disapproved of my answers, but he certainly got them all straight from the shoulder.

In a very short time I gave him a lot of up-to-the-minute information on the Berlin situation. Later, I understood that he was instrumental in having me promoted to the rank of brigadier general.

The Regular Army view, as it had been firmly outlined to me, was that a Reserve colonel couldn't expect promotion with so many Regular Army officers ahead of him.

Drug Store

The drug store used to be a shop . . . Where medicine was sold . . . To heal an ulcer or to cure . . . A headache or a cold . . . But now it is a meeting place . . . For youngsters in their 'teens . . . To browse around or stand and read . . . The comic magazines . . . Where sandwiches and malts are made . . . And sodas taste so good . . . When flavored with the gossip of . . . The school or neighborhood . . . Of course prescriptions still are filled . . . And cough drops may be had . . . And there is lots of castor oil . . . For every little lad . . . But nowadays the drug store is . . . The place where people go . . . To buy a lampshade or to see . . . The television show.

The DISTRICT LINE by Bill Gold

In a Pinch, Granny Can Take Care of Herself

Chairman Davis of the House Committee investigating crime in the District thinks we ought to have a "dive" law like the one back home in Atlanta.

Any establishment in which gambling is going on, or whisky or narcotics are illegally available, is a "dive" by definition. Anybody found in such a place can be arrested.

It's an interesting suggestion, but it could certainly lead to some strange developments.

Suppose one of our District Commissioners had been eating his lunch in a 10th st. steak house on the day when District Attorney Fay's raiders arrested a waiter there for taking a bet.

Would that have made the restaurant a legal "dive," and the Commissioner subject to arrest?

Or suppose Grandma takes Junior to the corner drugstore for a soda, and the cops pinch the joint because they've caught somebody gambling on the pinball machine.

Do Granny and Junior get loaded into the paddy wagon?

Possibly not. Especially if Granny has her umbrella along, and begins to lay about her.

But what about me? I like sodas and never carry an umbrella.

GIVE-AWAYS

"Four healthy 5-month-old part-Persian kittens, raised out-of-doors." (Vienna 208-J.)

"Very cute, housebroken male cat, 5 months old; we have a new baby." (North 4265, or Decatur 8300, extension 187.)

"Very cute all gray Maltese cat, 6 months old." (Lincoln 4-8464.)

"Eight-month-old housebroken part-collie; male, gentle." (Oliver 0524.)

"Very pretty 3-month-old part-cocker spaniel needs place to run." (Decatur 9242.)

"Upright piano, old but in good condition; free for the hauling, for any worthwhile civic or charitable organization." (Union 2688.)

ONE WORD FROM ME AND THEY DO AS THEY PLEASE

A few weeks ago I did a long piece on telephone exchanges and modern handwriting.

I pointed out that in many Give-Away communications, it's hard to decipher the telephone exchange from the two scrawled letters which are used as an abbreviation.

What's more, I reminded donors that even if the letters of abbreviation are perfectly legible, they're not too revealing. For example, "LO" can stand for Lockwood, Locust or Logan.

So I begged that, in the interest of accuracy, all telephone exchanges be spelled out, and written distinctly.

And it's a good thing I ran that item. During the past week I have had to turn detective only 26 times to track down correct phone numbers for Give-Away items.

LIFE IS LIKE THAT DEPT.

W. M. Devine of 234 F st. nw. reflects that night falls, but does not break; whereas day breaks, but does not fall.

This is partially compensated for by the fact that it doesn't make a particle of difference whether you slow up or slow down.

TWIN BILL

How come nobody sent in the recent double feature at a 9th st. movie. It was:

"The Hatchetman," "Farewell to Arms."

GARDENERS BEWARE

Many months ago, John S. Hamilton of 2025 Huidekoper pl. nw. sent in an inquiry about the big drums of sand which the District puts at strategic grades and intersections during the winter.

John wanted to know whether it would be okay if, at the end of the winter, amateur gardeners would help themselves to a little sand from these drums. The District's answer was "Sure, help yourself."

Now John reports back that he's sorry he asked. It turns out to be salt sand, which kills vegetation and poisons garden soil.

VAGRANT THOUGHT

Do you suppose it would do any good to sing, "Rain, Rain, Go Away?"

HESLEP CAN GO FISSION

Charter Heslep, director of radio and television for the Atomic Energy Commission, brings back a wonderful anecdote from Mrs. Roosevelt's first television show for NBC.

Top guest on the program was Prof. Albert Einstein. When Elliot Roosevelt introduced Heslep to the famous scientist, Charter explained his presence by saying:

"I'm with the Atomic Energy Commission. It's my job to help tell as much as can safely be told about work in this field."

With a twinkle in his eye, Einstein replied: "Sir, you are practically unemployed."

$80 Million May Build H-Bomb

By Drew Pearson

Atom scientists have secretly informed the congressional Committee on Atomic energy that there is absolutely no way to determine the cost of the frightful H-bomb until it is built.

Pearson

However, they have further testified that the new bomb would cost a lot less than original estimates, which ran into billions of dollars.

This is because a great deal of equipment now used for making atom bombs can be reused or easily converted to the production of H-bombs.

Officials of the Atomic Energy Commission also have informed the committee behind closed doors than the hydrogen bomb can be made for considerably less than the estimated two billion dollars cost of the original atom bomb.

The atom chiefs revealed, in fact, that all they would need to get started on production of the H-bomb is 80 million dollars, chiefly for special facilities and new laboratory equipment.

This 80 million dollars is already well on the way to congressional approval, being included in the 450-million-dollar deficiency appropriation bill that passed the House last week though only a few House members knew they were voting for H-bomb funds.

Remaking John L.

Washington's rough-and-tumble news photographers, who have seen about everything, are flabbergasted at "The New John L. Lewis." In the old days when Lewis was asked to pose for a picture, the answer was a snarl or a view of his back.

But today, when the boys clamor "just one more," Lewis is as sweet as a fairy godmother. He will even make gestures.

Credit goes to his new public relations expert, Justin McCarthy, who has convinced Lewis that the way to make friends and influence people is to be nice to the photographers.

Other Lewis

Sitting in sessions with the coal operators, however, Lewis is another man—as witness the "you-are-a-liar-by-the-clock" charge hurled at George Love, president of the Pittsburgh Consolidation Coal Co.

What inspired this piece of verbal gunplay was Love's testimony at the fact-finding inquiry that Lewis had declared during negotiations with the operators that he had 400,000 coal miners "in the palm of his hand" and urged the operators to bid for their labor. Love was referring to a closed-door meeting at which Lewis charged that the operators were controlled by "bankers" who wanted to make "slaves" of the miners.

When Love insisted that Lewis offer some specific proposals for a new work contract, the mine labor boss replied:

"This is our bargining technique. It is a poor, poor thing, but it is the best we have. Our labor is what we have to offer. You cannot work the mines without men."

Then Lewis extended a cupped hand and added:

"I have 400,000 miners. What am I bid?"

However, last week when Love said that Lewis had 400,000 miners in the palm of his hand, the mine boss said it was an "infamous lie" and added for emphasis, "Mr. Love, you are a liar by the clock."

Truman's Bibles

President Truman got into a discussion of Bibles the other day after Senator Humphrey of Minnesota presented him with a gavel made by Vigo Rasmussen, a Danish cabinetmaker from Minneapolis.

"You know," smiled the President, "I collect just two things—gavels and Bibles."

"With those two you should be able to keep law and order," replied Humphrey.

Proudly the President produced a gilt-edged Bible inscribed to "Harry S. Truman" from the American Bible Society; also pulled a copy of the Book of Mormon out of a side drawer, explained it had been given to him by George Albert Smith, president of the Mormon Church.

Biggest book in his collection of Scriptures, however, is a giant copy of the Koran, presented by the Prime Minister of Pakistan.

"It took a whole hide of a sheep to make the sheepskin cover," twinkled Truman.

The President made it clear that he not only collects Scriptures, but also studies them.

Truman Predicts

Since Senator Humphrey has a reputation as a scrapper for civil rights, the conversation finally got around to civil rights legislation. The President reiterated his determination to see the civil rights program through, and stressed the effect of such a program on our foreign policy. It is difficult to preach democracy abroad while we are practicing discrimination at home, he pointed out, and when the Russians are capitalizing on this weak link in our democratic armor.

Truman predicted that, despite stiff Southern opposition, the civil rights battle would be won—though "maybe not in a week." He pointed to hopeful signs of tolerance in the South, and spoke highly of progressive Southern legislators. He particularly singled out Senator Frank Graham of North Carolina and Gov. Sid McMath of Arkansas.

When the largest insurance company in North Carolina can be headed by a Negro, Truman added, the South is making great strides toward racial tolerance.
